THE BIBLE OUR HERITAGE

The influence of the Bible on history is the divine miracle of God. There is no book which can equal its power for good, nor surpass it as a deep well of truth, and a mine of information. Of all the books it is the most frequently quoted. In the Oxford Dictionary of Quotations there are 39 pages of quotations from the Bible. Lord Macaulay said in a memorable sentence "The English Bible is a book which if everything that is said in our language should be said in its name and power." The above lines are quoted from a Bible Society address by the Rev. G. H. Donald, M.A., D.D., V.D., Minister of the Church of St. Andrew and St. Paul, Montreal.

TRAGIC NEED - Taking together the tragic needs of Europe and the swelling tide of literacy, the Bible Societies are faced with such a challenge as they have never met in history. So far, it may be said to them that they "have not been disobedient to the Heavenly Vision" granted to the little company of London men in 1804. May we not be convinced that the Christians of today will answer God's challenge with an adequate response. Help the great cause of the Bible Society through the P.E.I. Office, 142 Prince Street, Charlottetown.

CAFETERIA STYLE LEARNING

In a recent issue of Time magazine an article deals with what a college principal said in a contribution to the New York Herald Tribune on cafeteria style education. The term is very suggestive. It refers of course to the number of optional subjects offered in some universities. Just as in a restaurant we see folk going round with a tray and selecting what they want so we see in some colleges the student looking up the calendar and selecting those subjects which are not difficult. Such students have little idea of the relative value of subjects in a well-proportioned course. Subjects may be selected which have no coordination.

What is the purpose of an education? If we settle that and do not think of it in the terms altogether of utility that it is not just to get a degree, or to fit one self to make money and nothing else. If we take Newman's view as given in his "Idea of a University", we shall see there is a place for the cultural studies, and those which discipline the mind. Newman says this: "The educated man has the repose of a mind which lives in itself while it lives in the world, and which has resources for its happiness at home when it cannot go abroad. He has a gift which serves him in public and supports him in retirement, without which good fortune is but vulgar, and with which failure and disappointment have a charm." He says further that the aim of a university is "to train good members of society."

In bygone times emphasis was laid on the classics and mathematics. The study of the languages, Latin and Greek, was the study of a careful weighing of the meaning of words. This helped the student to know better his own mother tongue, for there is so much that is derivative in speech. We have swung more or less to the idea of a practical education—one that can earn dollars. The old idea that is expressed in words, "my mind to me a kingdom is", is going out of date.

In a good many theological colleges there is but a bowing acquaintance with Hebrew, and in some cases not even that. Surely there should be some satisfaction in knowing how to read even slowly the Holy Scriptures in the languages in which they were written.

In thinking on the liberty given for selecting subjects put down as optional, one remembers that we do not give children always the things to eat which they say they want. They might like to feed on sweets, but they are—or used to be—taught to eat coarse foods.

So the farmers of our curricula of study have usually for the early years at least, laid emphasis on the studies that form disciplines—the finding the delicate shades of meaning in words, and the logical orderly habits needed in mathematics.

To leave school or college with a bagful of facts is not to be educated; but to leave with a trained mind, with love for good literature, with an appreciation of the beautiful, to know something of what Matthew Arnold called culture—that is "the best that has been thought and said in the world," means that one has not spent their years for nothing. To quote Newman again they have been taught "to see, to think and to do."

"There is a knowledge which is desirable, though nothing comes of it as being of itself a treasure, and a sufficient remuneration of years of labour."

Mr. Johnstone's Candidature

In another part of this issue is the election card of Mr. Edwin G. Johnstone who is a candidate for the representation of Ward IV in the City Council. Mr. Johnstone is one of the best known and highly respected citizens, who has made good in the various organizations with which he has been connected, and should make a progressive representative.

Ellen's Diary

But more drifts having settled along the front meadow which holds the short-cut from the mill, Mr. C. was obliged to light his steps this evening.

We watched the lantern come. Like an over-size firefly it seemed, such as on a still Summer evening flits through the darkness with lights a-glow, as one loiters on the old stone door-step in the lowliness of outdoors. Loathe to leave. Now skirting the edge of the pond in a feck of brightness, mounting higher then, to be lost presently amid the leafy Alders. "Stars are out now!" Mr. C. calls back from a veranda, and adds: "Guess we'll have a fine Sunday." "Snow flurries are forecast," James answers, "but like the rest of us, they too can make mistakes—though they usually strike it pretty well." "I'd say" James says drowsily "it's pretty nearly our bedtime Ellen" then pipe lit stays to enjoy with me the coziness of this, the last one of the best of January's hours.

Not that the day brought anything that was at all disturbing to our portals. We were able to go happily to our interests, the men to their choring and the women to their choring and the work at the wood that one of the young horses was broken to the sleigh. The two we have: the Nell mare's colt who in his turn appears to be lost in the length of the farm sleigh shafts and the one purchased last Spring. Both proved their worth at the plowing. Extremely patient Jock is at this breaking of horses, and James as well. His maxim has been: "One hasty move in breaking a young horse and you have him ruined!" But now that James "never bothers with them" he continues with the choring, but at the same time manages to keep informed as to the progress of the breaking. This afternoon's lesson was "without incident" and highly satisfactory to all.

And as it has been today, so through the month the farm work has been kept up, the usual schedule being carried out with little interruption from stormy weather. "It's been sort of monotonous" I remarked to James today, but only to get his reply, "Monotonous, Ellen?" he exclaimed, "let me tell you that no work is monotonous so long as one's heart is in it doing—and no two days' choring is alike. If one is interested there is always something new about it—and no man or woman should be on a farm if he or she don't like their work." I listened while he continued: "I believe, Ellen, like in all other professions or occupations the liking is born with one. Yes, that's it 'farmers are born—not made—and you can't make a farmer out of a boy"

REVACCINATION

The safety factor today is perhaps being emphasized more than in any time in the past. For the past few years one week is set apart as "Health Week." This is a special occasion when we should take "stock" and try and ascertain if we are doing as much as we individually and collectively can to make this Dominion, this Province, this City of ours as safe as we can from disease, which is our common enemy.

The consensus of modern opinion in the field of public health in Canada, in the United States and in Great Britain is that a single vaccination against smallpox is, in too many cases, not sufficient for a life time of protection. In order to play "safe", it is desirable and necessary to repeat this vaccination periodically. Every six years is considered an optimum time to seek this protection by a re-vaccination. It is the one and only way to banish this enemy and all school children from Grade VII upwards should avail themselves of this protection.

"Health Week" this year is observed during the first week of February and the Department of Health is making preparations for clinics in each of the City Schools the following week for this purpose.

Any school child, who has never been vaccinated and any who has been vaccinated six years ago or longer, in addition to those in Grades VII, VIII, IX and X attending the City Schools are eligible for these Clinics, which will be conducted by the City Health Officer, assisted by the City Public Health Nurse.

It should be pointed out that it is required by law that a child must be vaccinated before he or she can attend a public school, but the revaccinations are voluntary. Intelligent parents do not require compulsion when the health of their children is at stake.

The time and place will be later advertised in the press.

WATCH FOR IT.

B. C. KEEPING, M.D., D.P.H., Chief Health Officer.

if the liking for the land, and live stock is not there."

As James had suspected, the month is gone and part of the gallant old hedge of spruces still stands bravely against the Winter winds and snow though many have been cut down, and of those Rob has hauled a sizable heap of firewood to the yard. As sunshine follows darkness or rest, labor so in this month beautiful days were set amid the grey ones, the one to better point out the niceties of the other. Mornings the sun lit a sparkling trail along the snow and in the evenings, entranced one stopped to watch it sink to rest in a gorgeous display of colors behind the dark crowned hills. The moon at full turned the countryside into a fairyland of brightness and shadows—and silent white fields. A star-lit night, so Mr. C. said, closes this first month of the year, and one looks back to review the many delights enjoyed on this Island farm. Other things one should review at end of day like this. "When night comes, let thy deeds make plain the way 'Twixt heaven and thee; black is not with delays; But perfect all before thou sleepest; then say: 'There's one sun more strung on my Mead of days.' What's good, score up for joy; the bad, well scanned, Wash off with tears, and get the Master's hand." Until Monday — Diary—Good-night.
