Says U.K. Needs Continued Aid From Dominion

MONTREAL, Jan. 7 (CP)—Hon. Herbert Morrison was scheduled to leave tonight by train for Toronto after a day's round of activities highlighted by a luncheon address to the Canadian Club in which he told of the United Kingdom's need of continued aid from this country.

The visiting British Minister, Lord Morrison of the Council in the Labor Government, dined informally with representatives of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, met privately with officials of the C. C. P. and called at headquarters of the Dominion Government further about financial help.

Britain wanted to buy from Canada on "a large scale as possible" but she was not in a position to find exchange with which to pay for goods required.

"The situation in the necessity of the early re-establishment of multilateral trading as wholeheartedly as did Canada and the present British policy of restriction imports was related to the country's difficult financial position and had no ulterior motive as a protective measure."

"Any financial assistance that Canada can give us will help to tide us over our immediate difficulties," he said "but in the long run the extent to which we can import freely depends upon the success and the speed with which we can restore balance to the whole of our external trade." That, in turn depended on increasing enormously Britain's exports to all markets.

Paying tribute to this country's contribution to the war in men, money, food and fighting materials, Mr. Morrison said they constituted an example of the "great and practical spirit of Canada which played a part in the building of a world peace and world peace."

Speaking briefly in French, he said that "to us you are a great democratic and free nation, a nation with a very special contribution to bring to the various social-political philosophies of the British Commonwealth of Nations and the whole world."

A collection was taken and the meeting adjourned.

A delicious lunch was then served by the hostess, and the remainder of the evening was pleasantly spent. (Parish please copy)

Text of Address

"Dear Friends:
"In the holy hush of the midnight hour at a time when the world is united in prayer for the Prince of Peace was born in Bethlehem. This year, after traveling for almost six years, through the darkest days, and at the season in grateful tribute to you boys of our community who, measuring your personal comforts against the greatest of freedom and truth and justice, chose the hardest right rather than the easier wrong and offered yourselves unhesitatingly to the service of our country. You have gone forth on land and sea and in the air to battle against the enemies of democracy and freedom; you have held high those glorious ideals for which you fought, and you, with all our Canadian warriors, have given our fair land of Canada a fame of which we are all justly proud."

"Mr. Churchill in his VE-day address offered to them a message of congratulations to our country: "Canada may well be proud of the glorious deeds of your sons in arms. Or lands overseas, and in the air she played a nation's part. Her valiant army was the sure shield of this country during its darkest days, and in the battle of the Atlantic, and in the air over Europe, the Canadians have ever been to the fore."

"We, here in Kinkora, feel proud of the achievement of our own boys, for we have heard enough of your deeds of courage and firm manliness to know that wherever you went amidst the dangers of war you were loyally upholding the ideals of patriotism and the Christian principles to which you have been trained. And now we rejoice with those parents and loved ones who have realized what they long hoped and prayed for — your safe return."

"But there are some who will not return. To them tonight our tribute of praise and gratitude and to their parents our sincere sympathy. Let us pause now to honor the memory of the boys who have fallen by one minute's silence."

"We should like to express in some way our appreciation of what they and you have done. Though the gifts we offer you are but small they are the symbols of what we feel in our hearts — a deep gratitude and glowing pride in your share in winning the glorious victory."

"We pray that the Infant of Bethlehem, the Prince of Peace, may now take pity on the world emerging from the awful carnage of war, and casting upon us some small ray of the starry brilliance of Christmas night, may He grant that these sacrifices — your service and their lives — may not have been

Electric Hot-beds Again Available to Amateurs

HOW WIRES ARE EMBEDDED IN SOIL

How to install electric heating cable with thermostat in hot-bed

Electric heated hot-beds, which were unobtainable by amateurs during the war, are again possible for home gardeners who would prefer even heat, controlled automatically by thermostat, to the old-fashioned way of heating with fermenting manure.

Hot-beds date back to the Roman Empire, and the method of heating them continued to be the same for centuries. Electric cables were first used more than ten years ago, and they have been widely adopted by florists and market gardeners, who have proved them to be economical and practical.

A hot-bed frame is constructed in the usual manner, except that no deep pit is necessary. The frame follows the model of a cold frame, and is sunk in the ground about six inches. Soil is removed within it to an equal depth, and the cable is arranged on the bottom in loops, so that heat will be evenly distributed. The supply wire and cable are both connected to a thermostat, which can be set at the desired minimum temperature. As soon as the thermostat falls to that point, heat is turned on.

When temperature rises a few degrees above the minimum, heat is shut off, and the variation between minimum and maximum temperatures is much less than with the old-fashioned hot-bed. Moreover the electric heat does not diminish constantly, as does that furnished by manure, and there is no danger of injury to plants from a heated frost, which may come after the heating power has been exhausted.

The heating cable is usually covered with four to six inches of soil above the cable, with soil between the meshed poultry wire and the cable. It is a good idea to place a sheet of fine meshed poultry wire above the cable, which will prevent soil from being buried in soil, and this is always open to inspection. To improve insulation and reduce heat loss, the frame should be banked with cinders, which are covered with soil, to within a few inches of the top.

Plants grow better in even heat and current consumption for small hot-beds is low. Thirty feet of cable will heat a hot-bed 3 x 6 feet.
