Is Marriage A Lottery? Dorothy Dix Finds Both Luck And Skill In It

"Marriage is Like Everything Else in Life—It has the Element of Luck in it, but Beyond That We Have to Put Our Hearts and Our Backs into it to Make a Success of it," Says Dorothy Dix

Is marriage a lottery? Undoubtedly the great majority of people believe it to be the greatest gamble on earth.

Curiously enough, this view of marriage is to a certain extent justified, since neither age, nor intelligence, nor prudence, nor experience seem to be any guide in picking out a mate.

A thousand times have all of us seen marriage that we were certain would go on the rocks all safely and serenely over the matrimonial seas.

And we have seen marriages work miracles in the characters and habits of men and women that changed them from what they were into what was to all intents and purposes new individualities.

So there you are, and, observing these things, it is no wonder we have come to believe that marriage is such a chance sport that it makes horse racing and poker and roulette look like sure things.

It seems, however, that this prevalent theory that marriage is a lottery in which you draw a capital prize or get a blank according as Dame Fortune smiles or frowns upon you, is erroneous.

"It is clear," said the Judge in elaborating this opinion, "that marriage, while not wholly in the control of the individual's will, is largely the product of it.

us unsolicited. We have to go after the things we want with all the pep and force that is in us.

So it isn't by chance that men and women marry, but it is mainly chance whom they marry. Perhaps not one man in a thousand ever marries a woman because she is of the type that he desires in a wife.

And women marry for just as inconsequent reasons. If you should ask every woman you know why she married the man she did, she couldn't tell you.

But while in marrying we may be the sport of the matchmaking gods, who seem to have a devilish sense of humor in the way they unite people, the way a marriage turns out is mostly a matter of our own volition.

Making a happy home isn't an accident. It is teamwork on the part of a husband and wife, putting the best that they have into their marriage.

Nor is being a good husband or a good wife a matter of chance. It is a man being faithful and tender and considerate of his wife, and of a woman using understanding and tact and gentleness and loyalty and devotion in dealing with her husband.

Thousands of men and women who have drawn capital prizes in the matrimonial lottery have thrown away their treasure, as a spendthrift lets easy money slip through his fingers.

And so marriage is like everything else in life. It has the element of luck in it, but beyond that we have to put our hearts and our backs into it to make a success of it.

What the Fashionables are Wearing

By Annabelle Worthington A heavy wool jersey made the original of this jaunty dress. It has many smart features. The wrapped arrangement is slenderizing.

It is in rich rust shade. The sleeves and underskirt use a tiny checked pattern in blending tone. Matching bone buttons trim the tunic.

Black crinkly crepe silk is particularly lovely medium for this model.

You can combine the dull and the shiny surface of crinkly crepe satin beautifully in this model. Carrot-red, hyacinth-blue and antique-gold are darling schemes.

After the service he said to the man: "Tom, what were you doing in church?" "Taking notes massa; all de gen'men take notes." "Bring your notes here and let me see them." Tom brought his notes, which looked more like Chinese than English. "Why, Tom, this is all nonsense!" "I thought so, massa, all the time you was preaching it!" rejoined Tom.

The Double Act

A Romance of the Theatre BY MARION TOMLINSON

To the rest of the enthusiastic audience the display of Rosemary's charms in scenes of sensuous beauty was, though some wondered how the Lord Chamberlain could allow certain parts of it, not a personal matter. They had not idealised her through fervent weeks as the essence of youth and loveliness and innocence. Her beauty broke upon them as something new, and they accepted it for what it seemed to be.

But to Anthony the performance was sheer agony. Rosemary was too inexperienced to have any notion of what the attitudes that Grenoble had taught her must look like from the front of the house.

Anthony had rushed from the theatre sick with horror, and passed the night walking feverishly from street to street. By morning he had found himself far from town without knowing how he got there.

"He'll tell me what she is if I have to wring it out of his throat," he said to himself, as, oblivious of the curious glances that followed a young man in evening clothes, high hat and white silk muffler at two o'clock in the afternoon, he made his way through Piccadilly.

"Tell me what she is!" demanded ed Anthony savagely, "I'll tell you I want to know all about her!"

Grenoble, still warm with the fatherly feeling he had discovered in himself for Rosemary, considered the distraught youth before him. He saw him merely as the first of many lovesimitten youths that Rosemary's career would know. He must protect her from such. He assumed a tolerant and sympathetic air, and indicated the armchair by his desk.

"None of that Grenoble," he said, "I tell you I'm here to know the truth!"

"Then if you want to know the truth, I'll tell you," he said with emphasis. "She's not the woman for you, my boy. Go away and forget about her."

"I must keep the child away from that sort of thing," he justified himself. "She might fall in love with him, and he's quite capable of persuading her to leave the stage altogether."

It was the story of a little cockney boy, the unacknowledged son of an adventuress, who, after fighting for a livelihood as an unwanted, unloved-for child of the streets, comes back in dramatic circumstances to save his neglectful mother from disaster that threatens her.

"I'd like to see Dolores Monclair in the role of the mother," he thought. "She has just that quality of hardness, combined with fascination and beauty and it requires. And for the boy, I'd like a real child from the East End, some keen little fellow who would take instruction, and whom I'd train myself. I wonder if I shall ever see it on the boards."

Remembering the address of a play agent that a friend at Cambridge had given him, he sought it out. The rest of the night he toiled over the manuscript, making corrections here and there, re-writing some of the dialogue. In the morning he dressed and was in the waiting-room with his manuscript an hour before the agent arrived.

It's astonishing to observe what a sensation it creates when a professional diplomat says something that sounds like common sense.

Always Tired, Sluggish

Mrs. Hartwell's Run-Down Health Restored by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, She States

"I have derived great benefit from Dr. Williams' Pink Pills," writes Mrs. Lorne Hartwell, Osnaburck Centre, Ont. "My health got poor; indigestion followed, and I was nervous and irritable. My heart was also bad. I got up in the morning more tired than when I went to bed. My weight was reduced, my ambition shattered, my memory uncertain. I was unable to do my housework and I was so discouraged that life was a burden. A friend advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. While taking the first box my appetite revived. The daily use of the Pills for a time restored my health."

No Changes In Grain Act This Session

OTTAWA, Feb. 4.—(By the Canadian Press)—Parliament will not proceed with any legislation amending the Canada Grain Act with respect to separate grading of wheat, Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Trade and Commerce, told the House of Commons this afternoon.

(Last session Parliament studied the proposal that Garnet wheat be graded separately, but any action in this connection was deferred until this session. The minister's reply indicates that Garnet will be graded with the other strains at least for another year.)
