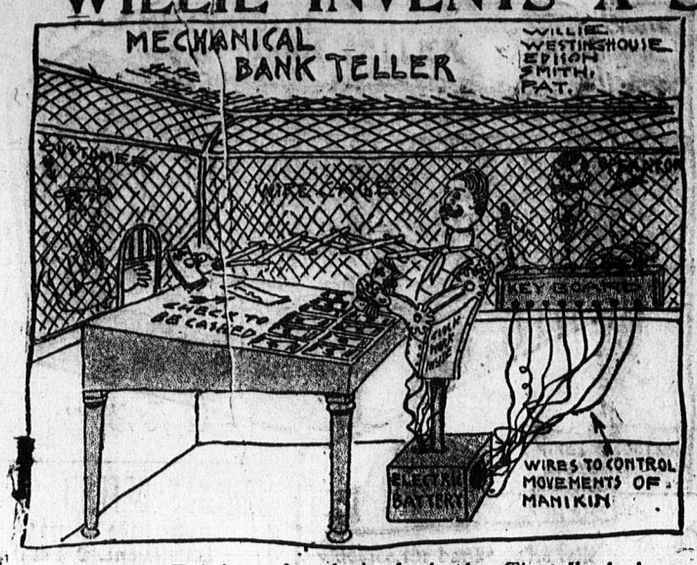
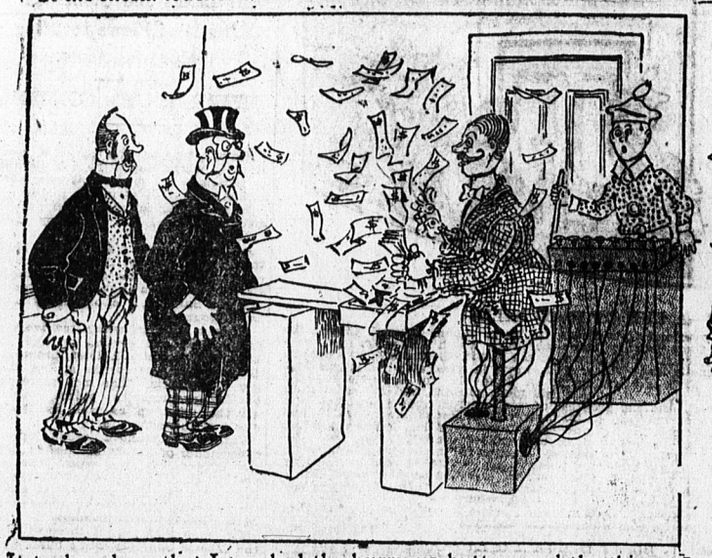
WILLIE INVENTS A SCHEME TO MAKE BANK OFFICERS HONEST



Dear Tommy:—This is a safety device for banks. The teller looks at the check, touches the buttons and the manikin does the rest.

When Papa saw the model teller count out the stage money he was so impressed that he brought around a bank president to see it.

He wrote a check for a million dollars, and the manikin started to count it out.



It took so long that I touched the hurry-up button, and the thing commenced to buzz.

Suddenly it reached over and grabbed the bank man by the arm, while its extension arm hooked Papa in the jaw.

Before it ran down the whole outfit was a wreck, and Papa won't have it patented. Yours, Willie.

And Her Maritime Name Was Maud!

Copyrighted, 1907, by the American-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.