arranged that no intervals of leisure will be had during school hours. In speaking of the time table, take care that it be arranged systematically, that the work is duly varied, that it does not put too great a strain on one set of muscles, that light mechanical work alternates with serious intellectual study. Next let us consider the influence of reward on the discipline of a school. A child may be stimulated to exertion by different motives 1st, by the hope of some reward, 2nd by the desire of distinction or the wish to excel his fellow pupil, 3rd by the desire to win approbation from teacher or parents and 4th by the simple wish to improve and to do the right thing because it is right. I would also suggest that a teacher demand respect or at least command respect from his pupils, both in the school and out of it. Never become too familiar with your pupils, but at the same time, treat them with every courtesy and kindness, show them by your actions, by your conversation, by your appearance, by your manner in general, that you are their superior, that stored up in you is authority and determination which they cannot fathom. Often it happens that it is the certainty not the severity of the teacher's punishment has a deterring effect on an offending pupil. For the breaches of discipline that occur daily in the school room, I would suggest the following methods that the pupil forfeit his periods of recreation, that he be given low department marks, that he be given a low place in class, that he be kept in after school hours, and last that you put him on his honor. I would strongly advise all teachers to refrain from corporal punishment except in the most extreme cases. I think that the use of the Birch Rod and the rubber strap is fast declining and must give place to kindness, consideration and the study of the individual character of the pupil. If corporal punishment has to be administered, I would recommend that teachers be governed by the following hints: 1st—Never inflict corporal punishment for intellectual faults, stupidity or ignorance. 2—Never inflict it while under the influence of anger or passion; 3—Do not let any instrument of punishment be included as a part of the school furniture, and as an object of familiar sight or flourished about as a symbol of authority; 4—Never strike a child with the hand.

Evening Session

Last night's session of the Teachers Federation Convention took the form of a public meeting and was attended by a large number of interested citizens as well as the teachers. In his opening remarks His Worship Mayor McKenna, who occupied the chair, officially welcomed the teachers to the city. Hon. J. H. Myers, Minister of Agriculture was the next speaker. Mr. Myers in the course of his remarks said that it was the intention of his Department with the consent of the teachers, to use for the next few weeks the teaching staff of the entire Province to forward what he considered a very important movement; in other words the making of this Island a disease free area for cattle. The idea of the establishment of such areas was conceived by the Dominion Government in 1922, and the first two had been created in Manitoba and Quebec with excellent results. In the latter province nine per cent of the cattle had gone down under the test, but the percent of reactors estimated for the Island was as low as two per cent. The animals that went down the initial test were not a total loss, the Federal Department reimbursed the owners to the extent of two thirds of their value and the farmer was given the disposal of the carcass. The live stock men were supporting the proposition and all indications pointed to the whole of P. E. I. being declared the next Disease Free Area. With the exception of boarding the inspectors while they were making the tests and conveying them from one herd to the other, the matter would be absolutely free of cost to the farmers.

The Island a Disease Free Area would mean pure meat and would also go a long way towards remedying the evil of the white plague. It would be a great advantage to the Province in many ways and would give a definite impetus to business. The Department was appealing to the teachers to act as a connecting link with the people. They represented the intelligence of the Province and it with their assistance the matter would be carried through. They could be depended on to place it before the people in the right way. Referring to education Mr. Myers gave the teachers the assurance of the Government that it was ready and willing at all times to do what it could to help the teachers. It sometimes got out that education was costing the Province too much, but this was not so. At the same time there were sections with low school attendance in which the cost was too high. This was a difficulty to be faced but the Government had been confronted with difficulties before and would face them again. The speaker also mentioned the splendid work being done by the night school conducted at Georgetown by Inspector Shaw. He felt that there were certain centres at which schools of this sort could be established and thus provide additional revenue for the teachers. A portion of the technical grant was set aside for the carrying on of such educational establishments.

Hon. Justice Arsenault, the next speaker, dealt with the possibilities for promoting education in teachers' conventions. Such conferences were able to meet difficulties, solve problems in education more easily than by individual effort. New ideas were suggested and things seen from new angles. Referring to the requirements of a teacher the speaker said that, as in all branches of learning he or she needed aptitude for their work. The chief factors of the school he said, were the pupil, teacher, and parent. He included in a definition of education all experience by which intelligence was developed, knowledge acquired, and habits formed. The efficient training of immature minds requires proper organization. The school was responsible for both moral and intellectual formations in the mind of the boy and girl; and the church and state, which in their separate spheres had interests to safeguard, should give the school every cooperation in inculcating correct habits of thought. The teacher himself should be of high moral character, undoubted integrity and should be able to enforce his commands. The speaker stressed the need of an intimate relationship between parent and pupil and teacher. It was one of the deficiencies of youth that it could not see the benefit of education. Boys and girls differed intellectually, morally and physically. Adults, forgetting their own young days, were often apt to judge youth too severely. Up to an age the child is a young animal and needed some avenue for the outlet of his excess directed talent that should receive the direct attention of education. Every boy was influenced by his environment and needed guidance. It was little short of criminal to allow a youth a free rein with the idea that he will profit from experience. He should be given an insight into the rules of conduct and the laws of personal and property rights. Speaking of methods, Justice Arsenault said he was of the opinion that excessive home work did more harm than good. Time taken up by such work could be more profitably spent in sports and an outdoor life. The parent, pupil and teacher should have specific duties to perform and failure on the part of any one was disastrous to the educational system. The parent had a two fold obligation to see that the pupil attended school regularly and also spent time on homework. The parent should likewise realize the teacher's problem in maintaining order in a large class and at the same time giving instruction. This called for self-control, kindness and impartiality on the part of the teacher. Just as the law of the land could not be enforced without the support of the community, so the teacher could not satisfactorily govern a classroom without the moral support of the parents. The parent could work harm by his lack of interest in the pupil, by exerting the wrong influence on him, and by neglecting to encourage and properly disciplining. He should endeavor to inspire a realization of the advantages of education. Indulgence ruined many a child's prospects of success. Regular meetings for teachers and parents should be held, the speaker said.

Education was a debt due from the parent to the future generation and the best way to pay it was to give such financial encouragement as possible. Dr. Trueman, President of Mount Allison University, congratulated the convention on the address it had just heard from Mr. Justice Arsenault. The object of education was to make everybody industrially efficient, to find out what the individual was best able to do and to train him to do it right. Teachers and parents were the vocational guides and this should be their duty should be taken up with much more system. The speaker was glad to hear that evening schools were being started here. This was one of the respects in which the Maritime Provinces had a long way to go before it had all its machinery working. Education shouldn't stop with leaving school and it shouldn't be said that education consisted in training the immature mind. The speaker lamented the fact that the reading of good literature was confined almost entirely to the early years of the individual. Today it was no longer possible to entertain the idea that when the individual grew up he was unable to study. The way to bring home the idea of education was to broaden out and take in the whole community. The program should be broadened out and the churches should take a greater share of the responsibility. The speaker would be taught in the schools, though he would like to see that in force. The Catholic Church was organized educationally, but the Protestant churches, perhaps because of their lack of unity, had not met their responsibility as they ought. The speaker went on to mention some of the qualifications a teacher should possess, saying that after all it came down to the teachers of the schools; without good teachers there couldn't be good schools. The qualities needed were sympathy, knowledge, sincerity, fairness, good appearance, optimism, and dignity. The philosophy of a teacher should include epicurean love of pleasure, stoic fortitude, sincerity, and devotion. While teaching was not a money making business teachers should be well enough provided to have comfortable homes and surroundings. Speaking on Maritime conditions Dr. Trueman was of the opinion that what was wrong was an inability to get up speed. The stock of people was all right, and measured high in intelligence. The death rate, particularly of infants, was deplorably high; the fact that tubercular milk was used was not something to feel flattered about. He was delighted to hear therefore, that the teachers were to be associated with the Department in remedying that condition here. Agricultural land in the Maritimes was good and the climate excellent. British markets were relatively close and hundreds of good harvests were available. In fact, nothing could be found wrong with people or country. Much of the blame could be placed on the fact that there was no real compulsory school law in effect. The Maritimes were taking the back wash of many less advanced countries because the people did not seem to have quite enough courage or ambition. They had to learn to believe more in themselves and spread the canvas.

of rage or passion; 3—Do not let any instrument of punishment be included as a part of the school furniture, and as an object of familiar sight or flourished about as a symbol of authority; 4—Never strike a child with the hand. In conclusion, I think the great success of school discipline is to do without punishments altogether. What an impression a person gets on visiting a school to find the absence of harsh and threatening language, the absence of instruments of flagellation and torture, and still at the same time to see perfect harmony between teacher and pupils. To attain these results, should be the goal of every teacher and he who does will be classed as a disciplinarian of the highest. One of the features of the convention was the address and demonstration "On Reading" by Mrs. Fred Houle. She emphasized the study of expression in its different branches and demonstrated this in the following selections: The Romance, The Race, from Ralph Connor's Black Rock; and The Famine from Longfellow's Hiawatha. Mrs. Houle's exceptional talent was greatly appreciated by the teachers. A discussion followed in which Professional questions were discussed by the Supt. of Education, Dr. Trueman; Inspector Shaw, Dr. Robertson, Mr. Morrissey and Mr. H. Yeo.

Basketball Games This Week

Friday night at 8 o'clock at the League of the Cross Gym two basketball matches will be played. The big headliner for the night will be the St. Bernard's team of Moncton and the Senators of this city. This should be a ringer of a game, as both the above teams are in excellent shape. The Senators have been getting in hard practices, and intend to make the Moncton boys step some to win. The Moncton team is composed of a great bunch of players, who play hard from start to finish. The second game on the bill will be a girls' match, and this too will be well contested. These two matches will afford a splendid night's entertainment for the basketball fans. It is understood that the visitors will play the Bruins on the "Y" floor on Saturday night when another bang-up fixture is predicted.
