The Old Order Changes

By DAVID LYALL

"I wasn't thinking so much of that kind of problem, Granny, as of some I've found at Mardocks. The people are slaves there, tied to Mrs. Manning's chariot wheels, or her apron strings, or her system, perhaps that is really the correct word. It's a feudal system. I've always hated and resented it. But I think there's going to be a change. The new Squire arrived this afternoon and I had the privilege of directing him how to go to the Hall. I do believe he is one that will alter things."

"Aye, what did he say?" asked Granny, interested because the girl was interested.

"Oh, nothing much. We didn't talk for a minute hardly. It was rather an impression I got, that was all. There wasn't anything high and mighty about him, as he spoke to me exactly as if I were a human being like himself. He's a Colonial—I mean that partly explains it. Well, I'll have to be going. Oh dear, I don't know which is worse, too much money or the want of it."

She kissed the old lady fondly and went off.

The motoring party from Gorham did not get back until after dark. Then Mary found the atmosphere unpropitious for putting forward her plea concerning her continuance at Mardocks. She and Granny had arranged it delightfully. Her five working days she proposed to spend at the cottage on the burn, as Granny called it, stoutly refusing to acknowledge the Forder's claim to be called a river. All rivers were gauged by the stately Clyde on which the poem and the prose of her life had been spent. Then on Friday or Saturday morning she would proceed somehow to spend the week-end with her family. So did this delightful but somewhat furtive pair of rebels seek to break away. But listening to unrepented accounts of the progress of the workman at Gorham Lacy, observing the deepening of her mother's social pride, Mary withheld her request. Another day could not make so very much difference, then her father would be home.

"Oh, it's a heavenly place, Moll!" said Bee as she unwound the veil from her small, vivacious head. "Furniture is the next item on the programme. Mum and I have decided to go to Manchester for a couple of days next week. Haven't we, Mum, and wouldn't you like to

Overwork or Worry

Takes the Health of Thousands of Young Girls.

In the "teen-age" years when school or office work is exacting and outside activities use up so much energy, many girls undermine their health and spoil their happiness for years to come.

At such a time Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will be found most valuable. They purify and enrich the blood; build up the nerve cells and correct run-down conditions. Concerning them Miss Margaret Torrey, Indian Road, Toronto, Ont., says: "When I was attending high school I suffered a complete breakdown. My heart would palpitate at the least exertion; I could not sleep and nothing I ate agreed with me. I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and before long I gained in weight and every distressing symptom left me."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"THEY WORK WHILE YOU SLEEP"

Mary rather thought she would for a moment. The housewife creature (and Mary was one though she had not as yet had much opportunity to display it) loves all the paraphernalia belonging to the houses. The very suggestion of a new wall-paper can thrill her and she can make its choosing a kind of ritual. There would be nothing unbecoming about Mary Freeland's own house if she ever got it—but perhaps twenty-six had begun to wonder whether that happy contingency would ever arrive. There are women who come to the great crisis and fulfillment of their being at a mature age and without having frittered away their store of enthusiasm or of reverence for the beautiful things of the body or the soul. They are rare. It is true, and pearls of price to the winner. Mary had dreamed her dreams of the perfect knight, but none had sought her.

Bee was a little like her namesake, sipping the honey from every available source, perfectly innocent and pure-minded, but by nature a spend-thrift rather than a conservator. This applied to her handling of every side of life. Her mother had smiled indulgently on her many affairs but had decided that Gorham Lacy should be the scene of more serious operations. Bee was the beauty of the family regarded from the Hilton standpoint. Mrs. Freeland had been a Hilton of nowhere in particular. Just lately, however, she had been busy trying to collect a lineage out of the past, and had even planned a modest coat-of-arms.

"I've decided on pink for my rooms," Bee announced.

"Recalls!" echoed Mary. "How many do you propose to have?"

"Two, mother says we can both have a bedroom and snuggery. Pink for my bedroom and a pale lemon yellow for my den with a black carpet. Moll, think of the background for one's clothes!"

"Mere!" said Mary, using one of Granny's frequent expletives. "What a plot!"

"I suppose you mean play, Mary," said her mother rather primly. "I can't think why you don't take Gorham Lacy more seriously and be grateful as your sister and brother are. There are so many who would be wild with delight at the prospect of such a change."

"Is Tom wild with delight, do you think, mother?" asked Mary in a queer voice.

"At least he is very pleased," her mother answered with dignity. "I suppose you and your grandmother have been sitting in judgment on us and making everything more difficult for your father."

"Oh, no, mother!" said Mary meekly. "But Granny has quite made up her mind to stop at Rose Cottage."

"Oh, she has, has she, and who does she think will have time to be jarrying back and forwards, especially when she's ill?"

"But she never is ill, mother. She looks the picture of health—"

"She's seventy-five, my dear, and can't last for ever."

"She doesn't look her age. I was wondering—mother?"

"Wondering what?" asked her mother sharply.

"Whether I couldn't stop on at Mardocks for a little longer. Canon Severn thinks they will have great difficulty in getting another teacher at least until all this trouble about salaries is settled. Over at Saverne-ke Green the Managers didn't have a single application and they have been without, or rather with some queer sort of temp, for three months."

"Well that's their look-out," observed Mrs. Freeland with extreme acidity. "Don't be a silly fool, Mary—and make life more complicated for other people. You pretend to have a very high ideal of duty, well practise a little of it at home for a change."

This was rather a wounding stab for Mary, and was entirely successful in shutting her up. She began to realize how strong are the bonds which hold together the family, how difficult it is to get away, or to stray into new paths.

PHILCO BABY GRAND RADIO

... a Bigger Performing Radio than its Thousands of New Owners Expected

The Philco Baby Grand has given its thousands of owners the surprise of their lives. Naturally, being a Philco, they expected it to be good, but they never dreamed it possible that even a Philco at $69.50 (tube extra) could surpass many sets selling at two or three times the money. And it does just that.

Philco Baby Grands have the gorgeous, life-like tone characteristic of the whole Philco family, because they are built on the exclusive Philco Balanced Unit principle. They are highly selective, acutely sensitive. They are, in fact, the first full fledged, big toned, big performing 7 tube, push-pull, electro dynamic speaker, screen grid radios ever produced in compact form—and at such prices!

Here the Philco Baby Grand speak for itself! Your nearest Philco dealer will be delighted to have you call for a demonstration. For your first set, or as an extra set in the home, the Philco Baby Grand will not be equalled for years to come.
