

FACE CRISIS IN MINES

(British United Press)
LONDON, Dec. 21.—Undoubtedly one of the first questions which the Labor government will be called upon to settle if it succeeds to power is the serious situation which has arisen in the coal fields. Premier Asquith read the sentence of death on the Baldwin government and although he intimated that within a few weeks his own party might be returned to office yet he made it clear that Labor would be given an opportunity to try their hand at the government before this occurred.

Miners now battling whether or not they will continue the old agreement and there seems every prospect that the great majority of these employees will demand higher wages. Should this be the result of the voting the whole of questions that were hotly debated during the enquiry of the

There is however the possibility that substantial reductions can be effected eliminating waste and thereby that great economies can be brought about by some system of grouping mines as has been done in the administration of railroads and that some scheme of this sort will probably be tried before nationalization is resorted to. There are still many conditions in some cases amounting to semi-poverty among miners that call immediate improvement. It is claimed that while living costs 77 percent above 1814 the schedule of earnings of the great proportion of miners do not exceed fifty percent of the pre-war standard. Meanwhile the aggregate trading profits in the mining industry during the last year amounted to 26 millions or 100 percent above pre-war profits.

A sudden strike is not expected but if Ramsay MacDonald assumes office he will be forced to face radical proposals as one of his first tasks.

THE HANDWOVEN COVERLET.—Its clean blue length lies out upon my bed. New washed, and smoothly drawn, its bonnet, thread, is still unbroken, though the hand that wove. Fell quiet years ago. The woman strove To give her homely task the touch of art: She struck her warp, and with a sturdy beat For sweeter labor, stitched no, her skill. Nor slacked the shuttle's hurried pace until. The yam bright web was finished. It was meant To grace her simple dower when she went From her mother's house, a count by bride. Of all her work, this was her chief pride: She loved its color and its trim design, And now, ten decades later, it is mine. To dress my bed, to comfort me in sleep—Aine and precious thing to prize and keep. —Margaret Ashmun.

GREENWICH SCHOOL

The semi-annual examination of Greenwich school, Lot 21, recently held was one of the most successful that the school has effected in recent years. The pupils were examined by the teacher and others present, and the questions asked seemed to delve deep into the store of knowledge. The teacher has been successful in establishing in minds of the pupils, and these showed by their effective and artful presentation that they have been well taught and effectively disciplined.

After the examination had been concluded there was read to the teacher, the following address: Miss Mary McIsaac, teacher, Greenwich school.

Dear Teacher:—With an expression of sincerity we, the pupils of Greenwich school, deem it our duty to manifest in some suitable manner our appreciation of your services as our teacher. No doubt, throughout the past term, times have been where you were sorely tried, perhaps angered, but you always treated us with kindness and did your utmost always to solve the most difficult problems, and to raise the standard of our school to equal, or perhaps surpass that of other schools showing greater pretensions.

When Miss McIsaac accepted the address and with evident gratitude and with your utmost appreciation of your work. Working you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. We are
