CAPTAIN BLOOD

A Romance of the Spanish Main

by RAFAEL SABATINI

Copyrighted, 1922 by Rafael Sabatini. "CAPTAIN BLOOD," a Vitaphone picture with J. Warren Kerrigan in the title role, is an adaptation of this thrilling novel.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued With the crashing roar of that second broadside, Colonel Bishop went off at the double, despite his bulk and the heat, his negroes trotting after him. And then into the stockade, panting and sweating, came Kent followed by the best part of a score of plantation workers, armed with muskets and bayonets and some of them equipped with handloaders. By this time the rebels-convict were coming in, in twos and threes, having abandoned their work upon finding themselves unguarded and upon scenting the general dismay. Kent paused to fling an order to those slaves. "To the woods!" he bade them. "Take to the woods, and be close there, until this is over, and we've gutted these Spanish swine."

The slaves would have obeyed him on the instant but for Mr. Blood. "What need for haste, and in this heat?" quoth he. He was surprisingly cool, they thought. "Maybe there'll be no need to take to the woods at all, and anyway, it will be time enough to do so when the Spaniards are masters of the town."

The landing was contested by the militia and by every islander capable of bearing arms with the herce resolution of men who know that no quarter was to be expected in defeat. This Spanish commander knew his business. Having gained the advantage of a surprise blow, his guns turned now upon the open space behind the mole, where the incompetent Bishop had marshalled his men, tore the militia into bloody rags, and covered the landing parties which were making the shore in their own boats.

By sunset two hundred and fifty Spaniards were masters of Bridgetown. The islanders were dispersed, and the Government House, Governor's Street, supported by Colonel Bishop and some lesser officers, was being informed by Don Diego, of the sum that would be required in ransom. For a hundred thousand pieces of eight and fifty head of cattle, Don Diego would forebear from reducing the place to ashes, and what time that suave and courtly commander was settling these details with the apoplectic British Governor, the Spaniards were smashing and looting, feasting, drinking and ravaging after the hideous manner of their kind.

Mr. Blood, greatly daring, ventured down at dusk into the town. What he saw was fetching him in haste and white-faced out of that hell again, when in a narrow street a girl hurried into him, wild-eyed, her unbound hair streaming behind her as she ran. After her, laughing and cursing in a breath, came a heavy-booted Spaniard. Almost he was upon her, when suddenly Mr. Blood got in his way. The doctor had taken a sword from a dead man's side some little time before and armed himself with it against an emergency.

As the Spaniard checked in anger and surprise, he caught in the dusk the livid gleam of that sword which Mr. Blood had quickly unsheathed. "Ah, perro ingles!" he shouted, and lunged forward to his death. "It's hoping I am yet in a fit state to meet your Maker," said Mr. Blood, and ran him through the body. He did the thing skillfully: with the combined skill of swordsman and surgeon. The man sank in a hideous heap without so much as a groan.

Mr. Blood swung to the girl, who leaned panting and sobbing against a wall. He caught her by the wrist. They sped down an alley, and white-faced, physically sick, Mr. Blood dragged her almost at a run up the hill to knock Colonel Bishop's house. He knocked, but had to knock again and yet again before he was answered. "Who is there?" The voice was Miss Bishop's, a little tremulous but unmistakably her own. "It is I—Peter Blood," he gasped. "What do you want?"

At the sound of her voice, the girl Mr. Blood had rescued peered up through the gloom. "Arabella!" she called. "It is I, Mary Trull." After a brief pause the door opened wide. Mr. Blood strode in followed by his distraught companion, who, falling upon Arabella's slender bosom, surrendered herself to a passion of tears. "Whom have you here with you? What servants?" he demanded sharply. The only male was James, an old negro groom. "The very man," said Blood. "Bid him get out the horses. Then away with you to Speightstown, or even farther."

"He . . . he saved me," sobbed Miss Trull. "Let that wait," snapped Mr. Blood almost angrily. "Will you please call James, and do as I say—and at once!" "You are very peremptory . . ." "Yes, yes," the girl cried, shuddering. "Do as he says—Oh, for pity's sake, Arabella."

The horses came at last—four of them, for in addition to James who was to act as her guide, Miss Bishop had her woman, who was not to be left behind. Mr. Blood lifted the slight weight of Mary Trull to her horse, then turned to say good-bye to Miss Bishop, who was already mounted. He said it, and seemed to have something to add. But whatever it was it remained unspoken. He went off briskly in the direction of the stockade, where his fellow-slaves awaited him in deep anxiety and some hope.

CHAPTER IX THE REBELS-CONVICT

There were, when the purple gloom of the tropical night descended upon the island, not more than ten men on the main shore of the Cimo Llagas, so confident were the Spaniards of the complete subjection of the islanders. As a matter of fact, whilst the main body of the Spaniards feasted and rioted ashore, the Spanish gunner and his crew were feasting on the gun-deck upon the wine and the fresh meats fetched out to them from ashore. Above, two sentinels only kept vigil, at stem and stern. Nor were they as vigilant as they should have been, for as they must have observed the two wharries that glided under cover of the darkness came gliding from the wharf, with well-greased oarlocks, to bring up in silence under the great ship's quarter. From the gallery aft still hung the ladder by which Don Diego had descended to the boat that had taken him ashore. The sentry on guard in the stern, coming presently round this gallery, was suddenly confronted by the black shadow of a man standing by him at the head of the ladder. It was Peter Blood.

The wooden taffan was a low one, and the Spaniard was taken completely by surprise. Save for the splash he made as he struck the water, narrowly missing one of the crowded boats that waited under the counter, not a sound announced his misadventure. Armed as he was with corset, cut-throat, and head-piece, he sank to trouble them no more. Within five minutes they had swarmed aboard, the entire twenty of them crowding from the narrow gallery and crouching on the quarter-deck itself. To Be Continued

Kidneys Must Have Plenty Of Water

Kidney and bladder irritations often result from acidity, says a noted authority. The kidneys help filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it may remain to irritate and inflame causing a burning, scalding sensation or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread; the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in voiding.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is often one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Begin drinking lots of soft water, at least about four ounces of Ice Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast. Continue this for two or three days. This will help neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs, which then act normal again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by acid irritation. Jad Salts causes no bad effects whatsoever. Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which may quickly relieve your bladder irritation. By all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.

Obstinacy in a bad cause is but constancy in a good. Our belief or disbelief of a thing does not alter the nature of the thing.

Muscle Shoals

Condensed from The Century Magazine (September '24) (Charles Merz)

The enterprise at Muscle Shoals has cost the country $135,000,000 in round numbers; for this sum three great dams are partly built, and the Government is in possession of two nitrate plants, a stone quarry adequate for the limestone needed in the cyanamid production of nitrogen, and an imposing list of incidents that run from railway cars to carpet tacks. One properly purchased at the outset, to furnish motive power before the shoals themselves were harnessed, was a steam-power plant in the small Alabama town of Gorgas. It is this one part of the original $135,000,000 investment which has been disposed of, and it is interesting to note that it sold for $3,400,000 after costing a little less than $5,000,000, quite a shocking bit of evidence that the Government sometimes gets its money's worth.

The question is what to do with this vast property. More is at stake than a great investment. For the shoals can be made to furnish 850,000 horse-power, the greatest single natural resource in the United States capable of immediate development. That power may easily become the central reservoir for all States east of the Mississippi River, and many west of it. Within a hundred miles lie the rich deposits of iron ore and coking coal which have made Birmingham one of the greatest metal-work-centers in the world. The shoals stand on inexhaustible beds of high grade calcium limestone, and within easy haul of ores that will yield zinc, aluminum, copper, and lead, as well as pyrites for making sulphuric acid, and deposits of manganese and sulphur. Surely this is one of the great treasures of a nation all too rapidly burning up its power stores.

Henry Ford's offer actually does none of the things his partisans promise. In the matter of fertilizer, for example, and fertilizer is a very major item in an agricultural nation whose bill for nitrates runs to $100,000,000 every year, it is true that Mr. Ford agrees to operate nitrate plant No. 2 to its full capacity; but there is no promise on his part to sell fertilizer at a fixed rate. There is an agreement to limit profits to eight per cent (on fertilizer, and not on the rest of the venture) but no agreement that the cost of fertilizer will be reduced.

What Mr. Ford proposes is, first, to buy a part of Muscle Shoals and then to rent the rest. He will buy both nitrate plants the quarry, and all the property that goes with them. This property is enormous. It includes railway tracks, cars and locomotives; personal property of every kind, and a stock of platinum worth half a million dollars. It includes houses; miles of macadamized streets and cement sidewalks; filtration stations large enough to supply whole towns. It even includes a deposit of $3,400,000 cash accruing from the sale of the Gorgas steam-power plant. The whole investment represents an outlay of more than $4,000,000.

What does Henry Ford bid for $4,000,000? No. Ford bids five. It is an amazing offer. Ford could write the $3,400,000 cash item into $80,000,000 set of nitrate plants his bank-book, sell on an hour's and factories and towns.

notice the $500,000 worth of platinum, and find himself with an expenditure of $1,100,000 for an investment represents an outlay of more than $4,000,000.
