Is This Your Case?

A good many people suffer with backache every morning. They think they have a cold, or else have caught a little cold.

More than likely it's due to their kidneys—may not be serious at all, except as it tends to become chronic—then serious.

Nyal's Stone Root Compound benefits the kidneys, helps them cleanse the blood from poisons, uric acid and does away with that backache quickly. Nyal's Kidney Pills are good too. 25c a box.

REPORTS DISCREDITED.

TORONTO, May 18.—The reports which have been circulated of late stating that the Order of Grey Nuns of Montreal had a large sum of money invested in the Toronto Street Railway and other public leaders from coast to coast, is entirely without foundation according to the Archbishop.

"The Grey Nuns do the work corresponding to the House of Providence in Toronto looking after old men and want all the money they can get to pay their way," said His Grace. "Such a rumor deters people contributing to a worthy object, was his comment."

LECTURE ON THE YUKON.

There was a crowded attendance in Zion School Hall last evening when the Rev. Dr. Pringle delivered a lecture on some of his experiences as missionary in the Yukon. Rev. Mr. Taylor presided, and after Miss A. Ross had rendered an excellent vocal solo, and Mr. Pringle had contributed two delightful violin solos, the lecturer recounted in simple but telling language some of the incidents of the early days in the golden, frozen Yukon. His story was not a pleasant one, but it was a story of hardships and trials, and it was a story of the distant Northwest. He dwelt first with the placer claims; the luck which followed one or two miners in their boring and working for gold; and the ill-luck that pursued them once they made their pile. Only in one instance did he recall a case where a man put his gains to any good account, and that was a miner who had turned farmer near Winnipeg. All the others had "blown the gaff" almost before they had left the gold fields. The lecturer depicted in graphic language the temptations of the music halls which sprang up in the mining towns; and declared that one must have been less than a man to have resisted them. The tragedies he outlined with thrilling detail. Little was left to the imagination. One, two, three, four, in slow, deliberate steps he detail the horrors of the orange pale of civilization. One almost heard the click of the rifle, as each successive unfortunate blew his brains to smithereens and went to meet his maker. The Rev. doctor said no one who had not the sense of humor could have survived the tragedy of the Yukon, but he had not time to give any instances of it that night. The audience was greatly impressed, and not a little depressed by the horrors of life in the Yukon. His Honor the Governor bore this out in proposing a vote of thanks to the lecturer, stating that he could never see what object was to be served by men going to such God-forsaken places, and as for going to the Arctic and Antarctic circles in search of the poles, it seemed to him the height of folly, especially when men could be so comfortably off at home. Mr. McLeod seconded the vote, which was heartily adopted. Similar votes of thanks to Mr. Pringle and Miss Ross for their contributions were awarded, and the proceedings were brought to a close with the singing of the National Anthem.

THAT BASEBALL GAME

A member of the Abegweit Club in forms The Guardian that the statement "the Abies would not play off" in the report of Saturday's baseball game was incorrect. Mr. Garret, the umpire of the game, explains that at the end of the ninth inning—the game resulting in a tie—he asked the different captains if they were willing to play on until either game won. Both consented to do this. After the first inning in the play-off the game was still a tie, two runs having been made by each. The umpire again asked if they were willing to continue when Mr. Saunders, Captain of the Abegweits, declined, Mr. Sweeney of the Connaughts expressing his willingness to continue the game. This is the umpire's statement.

AN ETOMOLOGIST

A Yorkshireman's Success in Rearing Butterflies
One of the best-known entomologists in Yorkshire is Mr. H. W. Head, who now lives on his butterfly farm at Burnston, near Scarborough, but who did all his pioneer work while residing in Scarborough. Mr. Head was the first to breed the butterfly in captivity, and to-day he owns the largest butterfly farm in the British Isles, covering between three and four acres, mainly devoted to the breeding of butterflies and moths. In the rearing of hybrids Mr. Head has been remarkably successful. He has raised altogether well on to a dozen, and he recently showed specimens of a yellow form of the green-veined white butterfly, the sale price of which is about $7.30 each. But what he is always on the look-out for are "sports," that is, butterflies or moths of well-known types, but differently marked than the ordinary. There is a good demand for these, and a single specimen will fetch pounds. It is all a matter of luck. Since he has been in the business Mr. Head has tried to breed a black variety of the tiger moth but he has not succeeded. At the have live stock does are not supplied. The live stock does not go beyond the caterpillar, or the fertile eggs of any particular kind of butterfly or moth in stock; but his clientele is cosmopolitan and world-wide in extent. A jet black butterfly, valued at $5,000, as big almost as a robin, with wings measuring 1 1/2 inches from tip to tip, was brought to London from New Guinea by A. L. Mook, an explorer of the species of Hon. Walter Rothschild, millionaire owner of the famous private museum at Tring Park. Several new varieties of butterflies, by far the largest in the world, were discovered in New Guinea by Mook. "I had to take up from the coast," he says, "cases of pearl shell, tomahawks and beads of all kinds before I could get the assistance of the natives in capturing the butterflies. The natives shoot them with four-pronged arrows which they use for killing birds. The female giant butterflies are black or brown or white, but the males are splendidly marked in green or gold. I brought back also with me a butterfly which has a hairy body, on account of the intense coldness of the Snow Mountains. A couple of my native boy hunters were killed and eaten by New Guinea cannibals, who kindly sent me back the bones."

SCRAPES CORN OFF COB

Curved Blade With Teeth Scrapes Corn Out Sideways
An ingenious little device for removing corn from the cob has been patented by an Illinois man. A piece of wire is bent at one end to form a handle and the projecting stem fastened to form a thin, curved blade. Portions of this blade are cut through and bent downward, to form a series of teeth which extend the length of the concave side of the blade. By drawing this scraper around the cob through each row of kernels the substance is neatly removed. While it is scarcely likely that this implement will cut corn from a cob as rapidly as some other devices, it nevertheless has this advantage over most of the others—it will not put the fingers in jeopardy. With most corn scrapers one is apt to scrape the skin off her fingers as well as get the corn off the cob.
