GUIDING STARS

While Luke tells us listen to the song of the angels, Matthew shows us Wise Men from the East— the home of our philosophy and religion— searching for and finding the Christ. The star led them on until at length it "stood over where the young child was."

Tradition and legend have been busy, and have even attempted to give us the names of these wise men. Even their number is but a conjecture. They were the scientists of their day,—studying the movement of the stars. Science should still be a star to lead to Christ. There was a time, now happily past or passing, when science and religion dwelt in separate camps and were not on speaking terms. There is one thing that we must remember—science pre-supposes order and order pre-supposes mind. It looks as if some one were here and left his signature, as the writer of the Eighth Psalm puts it, "Thou hast set Thy glory above the heavens." Some say it is hard to believe; is it not hard not to believe? For,

"Just when we're safest, there's a sunset touch,

A fancy from a flower-bell, some one's death,
A chorus ending from Euripides—
And on his base again,—the grand
Perhaps!"

So our unfaith is disturbed. Which aids life more—belief or unbelief? If we do not believe then we should stay in bed, Browning says. Science recognizes that there is a field where she is not a specialist and must admit that faith can work there, for if it were not for her hypotheses (starting out with what she cannot prove) science could get nowhere.

Another star is conscience. There is a moral element in man,— the voice of God. When we follow that we are led to truth. There are many roads to truth and surely one is conscience. When it is disobeyed a shadow falls across the floor of the soul. We have met men who have lost their way and could only say with Christian in Pilgrim's Progress: "I think I see yonder light. They followed it and were led to the truth. Christian went up to the light and ultimately reached the goal of his, travels—the celestial city.

The teaching of one's home is a star. Christmas is a season of the year when the lights in the old home come out again, and old names come back, and the tides of feeling flow. "as it not the memory of his home— the father's table — that brought the prodigal back from the far country? Some lad away from home this Christmas may be constrained to sit down and write as the memory of other days comes back, and he sees how happy they were, although the word "plenty" in the modern sense, may not have been known then.

But we are living in a wonderful time. After the French revolution, Wordsworth said: "Bliss was it in that dawn to be alive; to be young was very heaven." We, that is some of us, have gone through two major wars, and we have seen right vindicated and wrong bite the dust. The reading of history should be a corrective to our tendency to unbelief. We have had an experience, and that is of value. We recall the case of Job in the Bible. All seemed gone — children, flocks and herds, and then his health. His wife, who should have been a help, asked him how long he was going to endure such trials. "Curse God and die!" He said you speak as one of the foolish women. Then he practically says do you forget the past? I was somebody once, when I spake all held their peace. I can still hear the patter of the children's feet. When my children were about me" Job had an experience and it now stood him in his time of need. It was a sort of star to lead him to certainty.

So itis we pilgrims of the night have stars to guide us, till one by one they stand over where the Young Child is. And the Christmas story is ever new.

In Memoriam

MR. CLAYTON COLPITTS

Mrs. Milton Furness recently received the sad news of the death of Clayton Colpitts on the 10th of December at Albany, New York. Mr. Colpitts while working in the Railroad shop suffered severe injuries when a big power machine jammed pinning a sixty pound weight on his ribs and stomach. He was rushed to the hospital where everything possible was done for him, but, after four days he succumbed. He leaves to mourn a sorrowing wife and three children, Frederic, Clayton and Mae. Mrs. Colpitts (nee Louise MacQueen, of Orwell) is a niece of Mrs. Furness. The many friends and relatives extend sincere sympathy to the bereaved in their hour of sorrow.
