SOTHERN IS SULKY

"They're reported as past Mar-selles," came Cynthia Wright's cool voice. "All going well."

"Capital, Cynthia. For once you shall break your excellent rule of refusing invitations to dinner from your employer. We will dine together, and you shall drink a glass of champagne."

Miss Wright flushed faintly. "I should be delighted, Sir George," she said primly. Over the Mediterranean the sun was setting in a kaleidoscopic blaze of colour. The sea, dead calm, flashed like a golden mirror. Some eight thousand feet above that mirror "The Star of the East" roared south-westwards, its four great engines driving the machine at a steady hundred and eighty miles an hour, yet their sound no more than a not disagreeable hum to the occupants of the cabin.

For the party the novelty of the expedition had begun to wear off. Janet Manson was asleep. Her husband read a scientific review. Otto Fleisch dined with some complicated portion of his photographic apparatus. Carol turned her head away from the glory of the sunset. Rupert and Nigel Kerr of course were through the door forward, in the pilots' cockpit, and she knew better than to dream of breaking into that holy of holies. And then she noticed Antony Sothorn.

Sothorn was sitting alone as far away from the others as possible. His shoulders were hunched, his hands clasped together on his knees. And he was staring very wretchedly straight in front of him. The girl moved across into the seat next to him. He made no sign of noticing her existence. She touched his knee.

"Antony!" "Well?" "Carol looked over her shoulder. But the others were all busy in their various ways, and there was little chance of her being overheard.

"Antony — won't you make friends." Sothorn laughed. The sound was not pretty. "What for? I don't feel friendly, if you want the truth."

"Tony, I'm sorry. I am really. I know I behaved badly to you. But I am fond of you."

"But I am, Tony. We had so much fun together. It's stupid that everything should be spoiled. You don't want to ruin this whole expedition for me, do you?"

"I see," said Sothorn. "It's really your conscience you're worrying about—not me."

Carol stiffened. "You're too good to keep up this sort of martyred attitude. Tony. You've got to be fair. It's more you vanity than your heart I damaged, wasn't it?"

"I suppose so." "Then let's call it a day, and be friends—please!" For the first time Sothorn looked at her.

"You've changed, Carol, haven't you?" he said suddenly. "You've changed a lot. You've gone — soft somehow. It's odd. O have it your own way! I was sulking, and it was boring me horribly. I admit it. I'll try and play."

"Tony, that's grand!" He shrugged almost imperceptibly. "I mean just what I said," he said, "but it doesn't alter my point of view with regard to our gallant friend at the wheel!" He jerked one hand towards the pilot's cockpit. "I still think he's bogus and bad. And I can't bear your weakness for him."

"I'm afraid, Tony, that you'll have to bear it, and try to grin." "Why? I know he's running this trip, but thank the Lord he'll be out there in front most of the time."

"Because," said Carol slowly. "I'm going to marry him when we get back."

Sothorn's head jerked back, as if he had been struck physically on the jaw. "You can't mean that, Carol dear," he stammered. "You can't! It's impossible!" "We love each other, Tony, and we're happy. Won't you wish us well?"

"I think," said Sothorn, "that I'd rather you left me alone. I love you. I always shall. I dislike Larimore the moment I met him. Now I loathe him." "Tony!" "I mean that. And anyway — you're not married, are you?" (To be continued.)

CANADIAN ISLANDS

In February, 1931, the government of Norway formally recognised the Canadian title to the Sverdrup group of Arctic islands.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of MRS. GEORGE GREEN who passed away June 21st, 1948.

Your gentle face and patient smile With sadness we recall. You had a kindly word for each And died beloved by all.

The voice is mute and stilled the heart That loved us well and true; Ah, bitter was the trail to part From one so good as you.

You are not forgotten, dear Mother Nor will you ever be As long as life and memory last We will remember thee.

We miss you now, our hearts are sore, As time goes by we miss you more, Your loving smile, your gentle face; No one can fill your vacant place.

Ever Remembered by Husband and Family.

Make your ballot count for a strong, united Canada under the leadership of Rt. Hon. Louis St. Laurent

VOTE FOR GREATER SECURITY for you and your family

INDIVIDUAL SECURITY—Employment, trade, income are all at new high levels.

Taxes have been reduced. New factories, new developments of oil, mineral and other natural resources are creating more wealth, more jobs.

SOCIAL SECURITY—The Liberals have put through all these social benefits: Old Age Pensions, Pensions for the Blind, Family Allowances, Hospital and Health Grants, Unemployment Insurance, Floor Prices under farm products. The Liberal aim is nation-wide contributory old age pensions and contributory health insurance.

NATIONAL SECURITY—The Atlantic Pact against aggression and war has the complete support of all Liberals. Rt. Hon. Louis St. Laurent was one of its first and strongest advocates. Canada stands united and ready, in cooperation with other democratic nations, to do her part in building peace and security.

SAFEGUARD YOUR SECURITY, YOUR STAKE IN CANADA'S FUTURE

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear wife and mother, Mrs. George Green, who departed this life June 21st, 1948.

Friends may think we have forgotten When they sometimes see us smile, But they little know the heart-ache That the smile hides all the while.

Inserted by Husband and Family.

ELLEN'S DIARY

a white dog paddled to a doorway. And hoofbeats in the yard—and the rolling finished in the far field brought them back to us.

So it is that tonight, and earlier than is usual, we approach the last day of our cropping. James talks of it now at the kitchen sink and mirror before setting forth on a brief outing with Jock — which has to do with looking over an animal for purchase. "And you didn't get all the potatoes cut yet?" he comments. "There's only a few bushes left. We'll get them done in the morning." I reply, and I fancy a shadow passes over his face. "Oh," he exclaims, with some surprise. "I was hoping that you'd be able to give us a little help at the planting, Ellen — not actually planting you know, but dropping a few sets at the ends of the rows. That wouldn't be too hard on you, and would be quite a help to us," he remarks suggestively. Then wistfully "It would be kind of nice to get them done tomorrow, wouldn't it?" "It would," we agree, being careful not to get enmeshed in his web of plans. Still, as he says "at the ends of the rows." "Well," he continues, on a bright note, grabbing his cap and smiling hopefully "we'll see tomorrow."

"If this is tomorrow" granddaughter announced blithely at a doorway this morning "you promised we would listen to the eggs to hear if any of the little turkeys are ready to be born!" And later, amusement on her face, a hatching-egg warm against her ear. "It's ready — I can hear it. Yes," she whispered "all ready to be born."

Until tomorrow — Diary — Goodnight.
