It took him some moments and much tact to get the information. When he knew at last that tomorrow MacBeth had planned to send his secretary to the bank, he reluctantly released the nervous girl after a burst of furious jealousy, which terrified Roberta. Vehemently he had told her that it was because of her father's other guest—the cursed Englishman—that he had refused to come to the dance tonight. To meet Sir George was to denounce him publicly as a scoundrel. Then had followed a long and bitter tale of Sir George's meeting with conquest and destruction of a certain Senorita Mercedes.

What Roberta finally gathered was that Sir George had met this Senorita Mercedes on the steamer, bound for New York, had heartlessly singled her out and as heartlessly thrown her over when he found how little money she had. The tale was cunningly told. It made Sir George seem cheap indeed, yet somehow the story also cheapened the story teller.

Roberta was glad when Jack Navarro finally paddled noiselessly away. She was inwardly raging at him, at Sir George, at the whole world, and she was half sick with lack of sleep, fatigue and the fear that Sir George might find her there.

The gods were kind to her. She discovered that her father and his secretary were on the other side of the terrace. Guiltily, and vowing she would never do this again for Jack or any other man, Roberta crept upstairs.

"What's wrong with you lad?" MacBeth asked sharply. "The last thing you said had no sense."

"I beg pardon." His secretary turned from the window. "I forgot for a moment, because," he hesitated, "because I am trying to put a scheme into words that will make you see how feasible it is."

"Well let me have it and I'll sort out the wheat from the chaff."

The secretary looked at his chief with a cool eye. "It's almost all wheat." He drew a long breath and sat down beside MacBeth's chair. "The men you have reason to fear are after the payroll will be looking for two things: First, that the cash will travel from New York and pass through long stretches of lonely country in Jersey, before it crosses the river here."

MacBeth nodded.

"Or second, they will have gotten wind, through some source, of the fact that you have an account at the local bank, and although it may be given out that it's merely a household account, they will have their suspicions. If so, they will be looking for a car coming from the bank in the village to the construction camp."

Again MacBeth nodded. "Well," he said, "Sense so far. What's your plan?"

"Send an armored car from New York at the usual time only there won't be any money in that car and the men will be armed."

MacBeth merely raised an expressive eyebrow.

"And in the meantime," finished his assistant, his eyes snapping, "I will walk up the towpath with the money in my pocket and deliver it to Ray Browne on time."

MacBeth whistled and stared at him. "I don't want to expose—"

"You will not be exposing any of your men," Sir George said hastily. "I wouldn't for a moment propose that. It would be well worth the expense of the armored car, sir, if we notified the state police and they caught some of the rascals.

"But you? It is of you I was thinking."

The younger man laughed. "Who would believe that 'Beauty' Sandison was doing anything but strolling along to meet a girl. Or if they met me higher up the river, I am, of course, indulging in the British passion for walking."

"The towpath, of course."

"That has long lonely stretches."

"Yes, but they can't be traveled by motor. Their motor would have to be left on the road."

MacBeth looked at him jealously. "It's what I would like to do myself. But, thinking of Aggy—I hesitate to allow you to—"

Aggy's stepson frowned. "Of course, Aggy isn't to know; that would be fatal. Roberta's not to know, either. She's not to know even the smallest detail, if it's to be a successful trip."

"What do you mean?" MacBeth asked.

"What I said," and Sir George forgot his customary respectful attitude and unconsciously assumed a dogmatic tone. "Nothing can or will be done unless both of the women in this house are kept absolutely ignorant of what is going on and especially your daughter."

MacBeth lay back on his pillows and surveyed the determined young face. The young fellow thinks Roberta will get excited about him, he thought.

Aloud he said, "Roberta's not the girl to get excited about your dangers."

"Perhaps not," said his secretary, grimly, "but she's not to know for more reasons than one. Not," he added, as he saw MacBeth's expression, "that the girl herself may not be perfectly loyal and trustworthy, but," and he said it with due emphasis, "I am not trusting some of her quaint companions."

MacBeth found he could get nothing more from him then and finally gave it up.

"Mind, I don't agree with you about Roberta," he said emphatically. "She's high-strung and determined, but she's my girl and I know I can trust her."

"That may be, but after all she is young and she picks her friends rather carelessly to my way of thinking. Is it on, with Roberta in the dark completely? Or is it off, and you tell the girl the whole scheme?"

MacBeth thought awhile, and then held out his hand. "It's a good business like, workable scheme, so we'll say it's on and all females barred."

"Done!" said Sir George. "Ray Browne will meet me half way, and I'll get the money up there or be found in the canal."

CHAPTER IX

The sun shone brightly on the towpath as Sir George crossed the bridge on his way to the bank. He had the small car Roberta usually drove. She had refused, emphatically, Sir George's invitation to join him, saying:

"No thanks, I've more interesting things to do than drive to that rotten old village this beautiful morning, with nothing more exciting at the end than the bank and the post office."

He looked at her tranquilly. He knew that behind the brusque refusal lurked a determination not to accompany him anywhere, ever. Evidently whatever tale Roberta had been told down by the landing had been black. "I find your village and post office quite interesting. Anything I can bring you, Aggy?"

She shook her head. "Be careful of yourself laddie. Mind the awful turning at the bridge and don't be reckless."

Roberta laughed.

Sir George regarded her gravely. "What's the joke?" He was always careful of Lady Sandison's dignity and feelings.

Roberta realized this and despite her prejudice, liked it. She turned quickly to her aunt now: "I wasn't laughing at you, Aunt Aggy, but merely at the thought of any chance to be reckless in this place. What danger could lurk between th's island and the post office?"

"You would be surprised," Sir George said levelly, with a glance at his stepmother, "how full of adventure a countryside can be. I shall be home late today," he observed casually as he rose. "I have several matters to look after for Mr. MacBeth. I may even be too late for dinner, Aggy."

Aggy looked at him as he went toward the door and her expression was such as to cause her stepson to wonder if Robert MacBeth had not after all, confided something to his shrewd little sister.

Piles Go Quick

No Salves—No Cutting

Thousands who have itching, bleeding or protruding piles have not yet learned that quick and lasting relief can only be accomplished with an internal medicine. Neither salves nor suppositories remove the cause.

Bad circulation of blood in the lower bowel causes piles. The hemorrhoidal veins are flabby, the bowel walls weak—the parts almost dead. To get rid of Piles an internal medicine must be used to stimulate the circulation, drive out the thick impure blood, heal and restore the affected parts.

Dr. J. S. Leonhardt, after years of study, found a real internal Pile remedy. He called his discovery HEM-ROID, and prescribed it for 1000 patients with success in over 900 cases, and then decided every Pile sufferer, no matter how stubborn their case, might try his prescription with a money back guarantee.

HEM-ROID tablets have such a wonderful record of success in this citythat Hughes Drug Co., Ltd., and all good druggists invite you to try HEM-ROID and guarantee money refunded if it does not end your Pile misery.

"Joe" Chamberlain's Objective Attained

OTTAWA, Aug. 25. — Joseph Chamberlain is dead but his son carries on. In the Valhalla of statesmen, the man who stumped England a generation ago, urging a protective fiscal system with Empire preferences, must have worn a smile of satisfaction yesterday. His dream had been realized. The United Kingdom and the Dominions were united by trade treaties.

And although "Birmingham Joe" was absent his son carried on his work. When Great Britain and Canada signed a trade treaty at the Imperial Conference, a tall dark slim man, Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, signed for the United Kingdom. It made Neville Chamberlain happy—happy in the thought he was carrying on. And it must have made "Joe" Chamberlain happy—happy in his Valhalla home to know he had a son who would carry on.

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. ALLAN HARDY

The funeral of the late Mrs. Allan Hardy (nee Janie Corbett) took place Tuesday afternoon, August 9th, at 2 p. m. from her home in Mill River East, where all that was mortal was laid to rest in the Bloomfield Cemetery. The service was conducted by the Rev. John Fraser, D. D. of Alberton Presbyterian Church of which the deceased was a faithful member. There was a large attendance of friends and neighbors. A solo "No disappointment in Heaven" was beautifully rendered by Mr. Jelly of O'Leary. The deceased was a woman of exemplary character and through her kindly and unselfish disposition had endeared herself to all who knew her. The beautiful floral tributes bore mute testimony to the esteem in which she was held and much sympathy is extended to the bereaved family. The pall bearers were Messrs Brenton Ramsay, Robert Horne, Lester Profit, Gordon Hardy, Christopher Metherall, Watson Hardy.

We cannot say, and we will not say
That she is dead, she is just away!
With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand
She has wandered into an unknown land.

And left us dreaming, how very fair
It needs must be since she lingers there.
Think of her still as the same, we say
She is not dead—she is just away.

Fort Anne National Park

OTTAWA, August 25.—Impressed by the great historical importance of the ruins of Fort Anne, at Annapolis Royal, Nova Scotia, not only to Canadians but to the descendants of the early colonists along the Atlantic coast of North America, the Department of the Interior in 1917 set aside the military works and about thirty-one acres surrounding them as a national park. Many parts of the fortifications have been restored while other features have been added so that the park is one of the most interesting spots in the East. Thousands visit it each season and the numbers are growing every year.

UNITED KINGDOM IMPORTS OF CANNED SALMON

The United Kingdom imports of Canned salmon for the April-June quarter of this year, totalling 61,170 cwts. (97,196 cwts. during the similar period of 1931) were supplied principally from Canada — 29,032 cwts. (59,369); United States 16,835 cwts. (19,030); and Russia, 3190 cwts. (2,142), writes G. A. Newman, Assistant Trade Commissioner at London, in the forthcoming issue of the Commercial Intelligence Journal. The feature of the canned salmon market during the past quarter has been the new low price level for red Alaska talls.

Dainty Cuff Revived For Newest Goves

NEW YORK, Aug. 25—Glove styles have undergone a decided change. The perky cuff, which was eclipsed some time back by the plain pull on is enhconced in popularity again. One of the gay styles is a glove which has a puffy little cuff to go with the big puff on the leg o'mutton sleeves. Many of the novelties are in glace kid.

Daintiness is to have precedence over extravagant flare in the cuff, and with dress silhouettes of simple lines these designs have a most piquant effect. In keeping with the vogue for shirring on dresses, some makers have turned out bands of shirred leather on the cuffs. Even thread lace sometimes appears.

White gloves with cuff lined in a dark shade, and perforated so that the dark tone shows through, are another caprice. Leather bows nestle over the wrist in some cases and geometric patterns or two tone designs appear on several more tailored gloves. A very dainty, feminine hand is the general ideal.

A table is published in the forthcoming issue of the Commercial Intelligence Jornnal which shows the exports from Canada to the United States of principal commodities such as are produced on Canadian farms or are manufactured direct from such farm products, during the month of July in each of the years, 1920, 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932, with the United States tariff rates in force during those months.

Stream Flow In Quebec During June

OTTAWA, August 25.—The Dominion Water Power and Hydrometric Bureau of the Department of the Interior reports that run-off in the province of Quebec during June was much below normal. The run-off from the area tributary to the St. Lawrence river from the north, as indicated by the records of the St. Maurice river corrected for storage, was only 38 per cent. of average. In the Sherbrooke area south of the St. Lawrence the run-off was only 60 per cent. of normal for the month of June. In the Matane area in the eastern portion of the province run-off was 55 per cent of normal, whilst the same ratio for the northern portion of the province was indicated by the records of the Harricanaw river at Amos. Those below average run-off conditions are attributable to a continuance of the below average precipitation already noted for May.

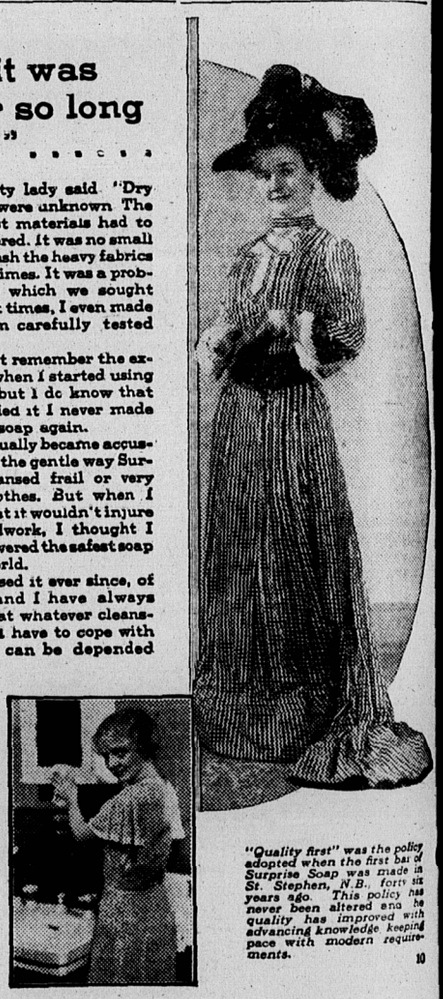
"Oh, it was ever so long ago!" . . . . .

this dainty lady said "Dry Cleaners were unknown The very finest materials had to be laundered. It was no small task to wash the heavy fabrics of those times. It was a problem over which we sought advice. At times, I even made soap from carefully tested recipes.

"I don't remember the exact year when I started using Surprise but I do know that once I tried it I never made my own soap again.

"I gradually became accustomed to the gentle way Surprise cleansed frail or very soiled clothes. But when I found that it wouldn't injure fine woodwork, I thought I had discovered the safest soap in the world.

"I've used it ever since, of course, and I have always found that whatever cleansing task I have to cope with Surprise can be depended upon."



"Quality first" was the policy adopted when the first bar of Surprise Soap was made in St. Stephen, N.B., forty six years ago. This policy has never been altered and the quality has improved with advancing knowledge keeping pace with modern requirements. 10
