Match Your House To Your Personality

There's no mystery about interior decoration. Any woman can do a good job on any room in her house if she will just be herself — her bravest self.

These words of encouragement come from a prominent industrial designer and interior decoration authority.

"Before you decide on a new color scheme, or buy a single accessory, write a memo to yourself, telling what kind of person you think you are, what kind of home best suits the needs of you and your family," he explains.

"Be honest with yourself. If you are the homey type who likes comfort and leads an informal social life, say so. Don't strive for sophisticated effects which will make an entirely incongruous background for your personality.

MODE OF LIVING

"Buy furniture or curtains as you buy hats—because, they please you and your husband, bring out your own best features and in general, suit our mode of life. You wouldn't buy only afternoon hats when your way of living calls for sports clothes. So why go in for a formal color scheme when you know very well that you live and entertain informally most of the time?"

The expert lists reseda green, cobalt blue, tobacco brown and cedar as fine informal colors to consider. He puts chartreuse, turquoise, prune and fuchsia into a formal category.

One of this interior designer's pet complaints is that altogether too many amateur decorators stop decorating too soon. Bare rooms, he thinks are as unattractive as overcrowded, cluttered ones.

TOO BARE

"When I see a room with walls practically bare, books concealed behind doors, magazines in a rack in the corner behind a chair and nothing on the largest table except a small ash tray and a humidor, I shudder. I know immediately that it was decorated by a woman who takes rules too literally, who probably never takes enough clothes on a trip simply because she read somewhere that it's smart to 'travel light.'

"So I repeat, get all the expert advice you can about colors, trends and so on, but don't let it restrict your own tastes and preferences to the pont where your rooms have an unlived-in look."

And in conclusion he says: "Be brave about colors. Dare to hang pictures that you like whether you have seen pictures of similar type on other walls or not.

"Don't consider only the legs on chairs or sofas when buying new ones. Look at a piece of furniture as a whole—not simply at the part nearest the floor. It is comfortable and if you like its lines, get it—even though its legs aren't of the same period as the rest of your furniture.

Nurse Heroine Went To Death Oct. 12, 1915

By H. H. GORDON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

On the scroll of the world's heroines the story of Edith Louisa Cavell adds a golden lustre to the record of British womanhood's bravery and staerifice. Twenty-five years ago today the gracious English nurse died a martyr's death at Brussels — shot by a German firing squad.

Today Nazi bombs rain on the countryside where Edith Cavell's body lies enshrined in Norwich Cathedral. It was brought back from Belgium in 1919 and interred there after a memorial service in Westminster Abbey. Near London's Trafalgar Square a statue stands as an enduring memorial and, at the same time, a reminder of one of the world-shocking incidents of the First Great War.

Edith Cavell, then 50 years old, went unflinchingly to her death Oct. 12, 1915, after being found guilty by a German military court of aiding more than 100 British, French and Belgian soldiers to escape from Belgium in the first year of the war.

In no sense was she a spy and all her activities sprang from a desire to help the distressed and injured. Her execution has been described in many quarters as "judicial murder" and, even if legally justifiable according to German military standards, it was nevertheless a blunder.

Political considerations may have figured in the German court's decision. Against deference to her sex and allowance for humane motives, her judges may have weighed a demand for a severe sentence to assure obedience of the Belgian population.

Cared For Wounded

As head of the Birkendael medical institute in Brussels, Miss Cavell led a band of nurses and others in caring for German wounded as well as soldiers of the Allies. Included were a number of British and French soldiers stranded in Belgium when they were cut off from their units in the 1914 retreat.

Suspicion fastened on the Englishwoman when Allied soldiers were successfully spirited out of the country into Holland. On Aug. 5, 1915, she was arrested and placed in solitary confinement in St. Gilles prison.

Nine weeks later Miss Cavell was one of 36 prisoners arraigned before a military tribunal. The proceedings were conducted in German though a French interpreter was provided. The English nurse was defended by Sadi Kirschen of the Brussels bar. His defence was hindered by the fact that he had not been able to see Miss Cavell before the trial and was not allowed to inspect documents.

The prosecution appears to have had no evidence that she had succeeded in enabling military refugees to reach Britain, but her admission at the trial that she had received letters of thanks from repatriated men was made much of.

The interval between the imposition of the death sentence, Oct. 11, and her execution the following morning found United States Minister Brand Whitlock and the Spanish minister active in Miss Cavell's behalf. They pleaded vigorously for her life before German officials.

Baron von Lancken, civil governor of Belgium, and General von Sauberzweig, military governor of Brussels, proved adamant. It was General von Sauberzweig who gave the order that "in the interests of the state" the execution of the death penalty should be carried out.

Visited by Clergyman

The United States minister succeeded in obtaining permission for Rev. H.S.T. Gahan, chaplain of Christ Church, Brussels, to visit Miss Cavell before the end. It was in a talk with her after he had given her Holy Communion that the brave woman made the remark, "patriotism is not enough"—words that rang around the world. She faced the firing squad with the same dignity and fortitude that marked her deportment throughout the long imprisonment and trial.

Reared in the quiet atmosphere of a Norfolk vicarage, there was nothing in her early life to portend the event that only intensified previous reports of German ruthlessness. Edith Cavell was the daughter of Rev. Frederick Cavell, vicar of Swardeston and his wife, Louisa Sophia Walming.

After graduating as a nurse she held various positions in England and in 1906 went to Brussels to assist in establishing a modern training school for nurses. A year later she was appointed the first matron of the Birkendael institute, the success of which soon made it of national importance. Miss Cavell was in charge of the institute when the Germans overran Belgium. They gave her permission to continue her work and the institute became a Red Cross hospital.
