COWBOY BAND FEATURED IN ROGERS' FILM

It's no mere accident that the members of the far-famed cowboy band known as the Sons Of The Pioneers are seen as the pals of star Roy Rogers in "South Of Santa Fe," the Republic musical western which the Empire Theatre will present to its patrons for a three day run beginning to-day. For the truth of the matter is that Roy and the boys are the best of friends in real life—and have been since long before the time he became a western star.

The organization was founded nearly ten yearas ago, with Roy as one of the charter members. And the personnel of the present group is essentially the same as when it was first formed, with Lloyd Perryman and Pat Brady being the only additions. The other charter members are Bob Nolan, Tim Spencer, Karl Farr, anad Hugh Farr.

Early Days Of Newspaper Shown In Capitol Film

Today's mammoth presses that send forth thousands of multi-paged editions per hour had a beginning far less glorified.

That humble beginning forged with sweat, brains and courage, is graphically depicted in the Capitol's new picture, "Wild Bill Hickok Rides," which co-stars Constance Bennett and Bruce Cabot in a thrilling real-life story carved from the West's early days.

Not that "Wild Bill Hickok Rides" is a newspaper story. Far from it. This Western is just what its title implies—a rip-roaring lusty tale of wild-west heroics and blazing six-shooters.

But in several scenes the newspaper of today is shown in all its original humble trappings and courageous growing pains.

The newspaper plants of today with their hundreds and often thousands of employees and miracle machines of speed and communications were once one-man shops like the one shown in "Wild Bill Hickok Rides."

One-man newspapers were part and parcel of every new-born town. The Powder River Sentinel, circulation over 200 once a week, was just such a newspaper. Walter Catlett, as Sylvester Twigg, is its publisher, editor, owner, compositor, make-up man, pressman, and salesman, feature reporter and circulation manager.

New Restaurant Opens Tonight

Another great record in the restaurant line has been achieved by the "Orchid" the new restaurant opening in Charlottetown tonight.

Situated in the Stanley, Shaw & Pearden block on Great George Street the "Orchid" seemed to The Guardian representative to have reached a new "high" as the most modern and attractive restaurant in the city.

The color scheme in accordance with the name idea, is orchid and green, giving an air of tropic color to the interior. The credit for color-scheme and interior decoration goes to Mr. J. Austin Trainor, City, who was in charge of this part of the enterprise.

The arranging and supervising of the up-to-date kitchen was under the direction of Mrs. Hopper, City, whose expert management of the cuisine of the "V" Club is well-known here.

His many friends in Charlottetown will welcome home Mr. Earl Whitlock of New York who will supervise and act as maitre d'hotel of the "Orchid". Mr. Whitlock was last employed in the Drake Hotel, New York.

At the grand opening tonight a special dinner will be served with the "V" Club orchestra supplying dinner music from five o'clock to seven.

The proprietors of the "Orchid" are to be congratulated on their beautiful modern restaurant and every success is wished for them in their new venture.

They have been here several weeks on a fishing trip and report some good catches. Despite gasoline and tire rationing, the visitors are enjoying their forays into the country after the trout.

NEW EQUIPMENT — The new equipment recently installed in the Anesthetic and X-Ray departments of the Charlottetown Hospital is proving to be very beneficial and has been widely used. The equipment includes a new gas machine and a cardiograph. The former is operated by Sister Faustina, who took a special course in that work in Grace Hospital, Detroit, Mich. The latter is in charge of Sister Mary Ursula while the readings are done by Dr. J. D. MacGuigan, who recently took a course in the work.

class colors of pink and gold predominating. The six graduates, in their white uniforms, were seated on the platform during the ceremony.

A pleasing musical program interspersed the addresses. This included music by Ding Connolly's orchestra; violin solo by a student nurse, Miss Carolyn Kenny; a vocal solo by Miss Phyllis Blanchard; two solos by Rev. Bernard Gillis, D. D.; a recitation of a tribute to Lucy Maud Montgomery, to Mr. Churchill and Prayer for England, by the senior pupils of Notre Dame; selection 'La Golondrina" by the orchestra. Accompanists were Mrs. T. W. Campbell, Miss Marion Dougan and Mr. Connolly. Following the exercises several hours were spent in dancing.

ADDRESS TO GRADUATES

In the course of his address to the graduates, Rev. P. D. McMahon said:

"The ideal of nursing is founded on the concept of man as found in the Christian religion. It is true that from the beginning there was care given to the sick but in most cases it was prompted by self-interest as in the case of servants or slaves who were cared for while there was hope that they might still be useful to their masters but who were cast aside to die like the lower animals when they became old or useless. Universal care of the sick was unknown and nursing was reserved for the favored few, and even then, it lacked any spiritual foundation, and was wholly mercenary.

"The concept of man in the christian religion is that of a child of God and an heir of heaven. It is founded on the teaching of Christ of the brotherhood and equality of all men in the eyes of God, and that He would reward even a cup of cold water given in His name, and that He would consider as done to Himself anything that was done for even the least of His brethren.

"In the exercise of your profession outside the hospital you will, no doubt, from time to time be brought face to face with another code of ethics. The dignity of man and his God given right to bodily untegrity and life are denied in many quarters today. If in the exercise of your profession you have always clearly in your mind the christian concept of man as a child of God with an eternal destiny, you will never by co-operation, descend to the level of mentality whose ideal is pure humanitarianism and maudlin sentimentality; whose concept of a member of the Mystical Body is as of an animal whose pain is to be relieved simply that he might suffer no more and who may be mutilated if the so called good of the more perfect of the species demands it, or killed off to be put out of misery, if, from a medical standpoint, his case is hopeless.

"In a word your nursing will depend upon That which is within." The rest of it is the ornamentation, some of it, of course, essential some of it merely conventional. In this regard I am reminded of a passage from Hamlet concerning outward appearances: His mother remarked that he seemed unduly affected by the death of his father, and he replied.

'Seems, madam, nay, it is; I know not "seems"
'Tis not alone my inky cloak good mother,
Nor customary suits, of solemn black
Nor windy suspiration of forced breath,
No, nor the fruitful river and the eye,
Nor dejected behaviour of the visage,
Together with all forms, moods, shapes of grief
That can denote me truly. These indeed "seem"
But I have that within which passeth show
These but the trappings and the suits of woe."

"My dear graduates, see to it always that all you have learned and all you will learn be but the trappings around the heart and mind of a true christian nurse.

"It is not my intention to dwell upon the fact that universal care of the sick being the natural outgrowth of the christian charity that is in the message of Christ, must necessarily have followed the spread of the gospel throughout the world.

In Footsteps of Saints

"I will simply remark that in exercising your profession you are following in the footsteps of the saints. You know that many of them in wealth and high position thought it an honor to minister to God's affected even to performing the most menial and in unchristian eyes the most degrading tasks.

"The first nurses were consecrated religious and after the great religious upheaval, the care of the sick was carried on almost exclusively by the religious orders. It is only in quite modern times that lay nursing became revived and it is your duty to uphold its true ideal.

"The great danger is that of becoming mercenary. You are, of course entitled to due recompense because it is your life work but, it seems to me, that the mercenary spirit is entering just a little too much into the profession. If you are not on guard it will dull your enthusiasm, harden your heart and destroy your ideal.

"And now, not to belabor my theme, let me hasten to congratulate you on this happy occasion. I suppose this day seemed far away when nervous and trembling you presented yourselves at the hospital for the first time. Time passes quickly, and three years now seem like a day, but they have changed you from the nervous hesitating girls who looked so faintheartedly at the uncertain future to the trained confident more mature young women who present themselves tonight for graduation with the seal of approval of the hospital upon them.

"You have been well instructed under the guidance of those very lives who are the personification of the highest ideal of nursing. All they ask of you in return is that you be always worthy of them.

"Your hospital pin has two words "minimis mihi" "to the least; to Me" and in that paraphrase of the christian message of brotherly love you will have always before you the ideal which was the theme of my parting address to you this evening.

"May it be your joy after a long and happy and fruitful life in the exercise of your profession to hear one day those words from the lips of the Master when He comes to pass judgment on your lives for they will mean your eternal reward."

Remembered by Congregation

At the close of the congregational prayer meeting at Trinity United Church last evening, Rev. Donald Boothroyd, the assistant minister, was presented with an address by Mr. John A. McNair on behalf of the congregation, accompanied by a well filled purse, as an expression of the warmest esteem and appreciation.

Rev. Mr. Boothroyd leaves next fall to take up a scholarship at Drew University, Madison, New York, which he won as a divinity student at Pine Hill.

He is to be married shortly to Miss Ruth Christie, daughter of the Rev. Geo. Christie, who has also two brothers studying for the Ministry, and whose association with Trinity Church while residing in Charlottetown was referred to in appreciative terms by Mr. MacNair.

Mr. Boothroyd and Miss Christie were recipients previously, of addresses and presentations by the Choir, King's Daughters, and other church organizations.

WELL COMPANY HEAD DIES

SYDNEY, N. S., June 3—(CP)—Noah Trask, 52, owner and manager of the Trask Well Company at nearby Sydney River, died today after a short illness. He lived at one time in Sackville, N. B.
