Cars Equipped With 4 Brakes Set New Record

McLAUGHLIN'S BEAT OFFICIAL SAFETY TESTS WITH MARGIN TO SPARE

Portage avenue was the scene of the police test of the four wheel braking system that is the standard equipment on the 1924 McLaughlin cars, and several hundred spectators witnessed Paul Welch shatter the safety limits that are set by the Canadian National Safety Council and the police departments throughout Canada.

Two tests were carried out, one on dry pavements and one on wet. In each test the McLaughlin car fully demonstrated that the four wheel braking system is capable of giving over one hundred per cent. more protection in case of emergency than cars equipped with the old style two break system.

One of the features that Welch showed on Saturday was driving at a twenty-five mile an hour clip without his hands on the steering wheel and coming to a full stop in the short distance of 29 feet 9 inches, without any perceptible skid. This demonstration of driving and braking without any control of the steering, which was for the purpose of showing that the front brakes do not grab and interfere with the desired directional steering of the car.

The following are the limits set by the C. N. S. C. and the police departments throughout Canada, including Edmonton, and the distances taken by the McLaughlin car to come to a stop while driving at the different speeds.

Official Limits.

(Tests always carried out on dry pavement)

10 m. p. h. takes 9 ft. 2 in.
15 m. p. takes 20 ft. 8 in.
20 m. p. h. takes 37 feet.
25 m. p. h. takes 58 ft.
30 m. p. h. takes 83 ft. 3 in.
35 m. p. h. takes 148 ft.
40 m. p. h. takes 148 ft

McLaughlin Six

(dry pavements)

10 m. p. h. took 2 ft.
15 m. p. h. took 10 ft. 1 in.
20 m. p. h. took 16 feet 8 1-2in
25 m. p. h. took 27 ft. 1-2 in.
30 m. p. h. took 33 ft, 8 1-2 in.
35 m. p. h. took 41 ft. 3 1-2 in.

McLaughlin Six

(wet pavement)

10 m. p. h. took 3 ft. 11 in.

30 m. p. h. took 42 ft. 9 in.
35 m. p. h. took 59 ft. 1 in.
40 m. p. h. took 90 ft. 6 in.

McLaughlin Four

(dry pavement)

10 m. p. h. took 2 ft. 9 in.
15 m. p. h. took 11 ft. 9 in.
20 m. p. h. took 22 ft. 3 1-2 in.
25 m. p. h. took 28 ft. 5 in.
30 m. p. h. took 40 ft. 2 in.
35 m. p. h. took 58 ft. 8 in.

All these tests were carried out under the supervision of Chief of Police Shute, Sergeant Smith police traffic officer, and F. H. Needham, automobile editor of the Edmonton Journal.

Before and after the tests the speedometers on the cars were tested by Traffic Officer Smith and found to be registering correctly.

"THE LOVE PENDULUM"

BY MARION RUBINCAM

THE FIGHT

Chapter 75

"At least I'm glad to know they don't like me, and why," I said finally. "It clears the atmosphere, doesn't it? I could not understand this curious antagonism, I've felt it ever since I came back."

"Why did you come back?" Mother Taylor demanded suddenly. "There were lots of other places to go. Your aunt goes away all summer, why don't you go with her?"

A vision of the restless summer my aunt led, came to me. Parties the same as those in the winter, except they were often held out-of-doors and one wore cream lace and chiffon instead of tinsel and brocade. Otherwise there was little difference between her summer and her winter life.

"I like it better here—or did. Heaven knows, my Aunt and the people she sees, talk enough scandal and gossip!"

"Doubtless they deserve to have scandal talked, my mother-in-law remarked with her lips pursed up.

"Doubtless they do," I answered. "But from all I hear, they talk it, and deserve it as much down here."

Big cities are always immoral," said Mother Taylor with an air of great virtue.

"Little towns are infinitely worse," I exclaimed with sudden fury. "At least in New York and the other big cities they vary the gossip by talking of interesting things, boots and music and politics and travel and things of that sort. Here they seem to talk scandal and nothing else, except how to bake cakes and run a house."

"The scandal's worse in the city —"

"It isn't. It couldn't be," I interrupted, thinking of the sordid, ugly details of some of the talk I had heard. "It's worse here because it's narrowed so. In the city, if I leave my husband or my husband leaves me, there is a lot of talk and speculation and some rumors may be unpleasant. But after all, they conclude it's my affair and not theirs, and in a few weeks it's accepted and forgotten. My friends stay with me and Winthrops with him. Here they never let it die down. It's always a new subject."

After a moment I added:

"Besides, I thought it would be nice to stay near you."

This produced an odd effect in stead of softening, mother Taylor stiffened as though a rod had been tied to her back.

"Even if you think my house is hideous and full of a lot of trashy furniture."

I turned and stared. My own harmless little remark to Ella had gone back to her this way. It may have been tactless to say I thought her house to full of chairs and tables, that it made me restless. But I would have told her as soon, had there been an occasion for it. Naturally I would not volunteer such information.

Yet I said it privately to Ella. I had told Ella many things much more serious in confidence, as Ella had told me many serious things too.

I would not have dreamed of violating the girl's trust in me. Yet she must have repeated what I said, otherwise it could not have gotten back so.

I tried to explain my own harmless remark. Explanations made it worse, as unfortunately they have a habit of doing.

"You see, I happen to like rooms with very little in them. You like rooms with more thangs about. I was tired and restless when I first came and I suppose when I tripped over that footstool so often in the dark, it made me—"

"You might have looked where you were going," was the answer I got to this.

And that naturally ended the conversation. I was determined not to open it. I picked up some sewing and began to work. Connie came into the room, hugging her railroad engine, and began to drag out the toy tracks and switches that went with it. She was much too young to have any idea of how to play with mechanical toys, but she liked the glitter and clatter of the tin tracks as she pulled them out on the floor.

Mother Taylor watched her curiously, and I watched Mothey Taylor while I worked. Because of our talk she had, at least, lost her uncomfortable feeling towards the child.

"Are you going to bring her mother here to stop the gossip?" she asked finally.

"No," I said quietly. "If I had any good reason for bringing Mrs. Anderson I would, but she would find it hard to leave her family."

Another silence.

"I suppose since you find it so unpleasant here you'll be going back tothe city?"

"No," I answered again. "I had thought of that, but I shan't. I've just finished fixing up this house. I'm perfectly comfortable here and Connie is improving every day. It's cowardly to run. It looks guilty too, so I'll stay. More than that, Colin is coming again—if you'll let him have a room in your house."

Tomorrow—Colin.

THE BARGAIN APPEAL

"I can see now why you men like baseball," remarked Mrs. Burlap. "I appreciate those extra or bargain innings. Now an opera never gives you an extra act."—Louisvill Courier Journal.

TRIBUTE PAID TO LATE R. S. PAUL

Referring to the funeral of Robt. S. Paul, who was a son of the late Captain Robert Paul, of Charlottetown, P. E. I., a prominent shipowner in the sixties and seventies in Charlottetown, at Los Angeles, Calif., recently, a Los Angeles paper says:

"The funeral of the late Robert S. Paul was very large. He was a member of Joppa Lodge, No. 201, A.F. & A.M., and also of the Masonic Engineers' Benevolent Association, Lodge No. 36, San Francisco. The funeral took place from his late residence, Victoria Avenue, to the Little Church of the Flowers, Forest Lawn Cemetery for masonic services. He had a wonderful funeral, with a great many flowers. His ship, the Dixie, was reproduced in flowers. Another beautiful thing was an anchor, a ship's chain, and other reproductions of things essentially belonging to ships. The stars and stripes were draped over his casket, which was made from hammered silver, and his sword lay on top. The Elks held a service at the house, the Masons at the grave, and a body of Spanish War Veterans also spoke, and then 'Taps' sounded. It was all very impressive."

The late Mr. Paul was a brother of A. R. and W. H. Paul of this city, and was a native of Charlottetown, P. E. I. He was very prominent in U. S. naval engineering circles and during the Spanish American war was chief engineer of the U. S. S. Dixie, referred to above. He retired from active engineering services a couple of years previous to his death.

The more virtuous any man is the less easily does he suspect others to be vicious.—Cicero.

THE GODDESS OF THE VOLCANO

One of the legendary stories that come to us from the Hawaiian Islands is to the effect that Pele, the fearful goddess who dwelt in the famous volcano, Kilauea, on the eastern slope of Mount Mauna Loa, Hawaii Island, once had a terrific contest with Kamaupauaa, a creature half man and half dog, with eight eyes. this "Centaur of Hawaii" had the calm impudence to offer his addresses to Pele, who scornfully rejected the beast's overtures and added insult to injured feelings by calling him "a hog and the son of a hog."

Battle ensured, and Pele fled to her volcano home, into which Kamapuaa poured such torrents of water that the fires were nearly extinguished. But Pele and her followers drank up the water and eventually drove the pigman away in a shower to fire and stones. It is believed that a great eruption of the volcano, during which streams of lava went pouring down into the sea, was the origin of this tale.
