THEY HAD TO SEE PARIS

By Homer Croy

"Everybody does it in France, so why shouldn't I?" demanded Ross sullenly.

"Even if it's true, why should we pick out the bad things of France to copy? We ain't running short of bad things in America. We've got enough to last us a long time yet before we have to import. It's like going to a barrel to get an apple and then picking out a rotten one. Such things as you are doing may be all right in France, but that ain't the way we do things in America, and if I was going to be an American and live in America I wouldn't get myself into a mess like this. The big men I've known wouldn't do it. It may not be hurting Fleurie—I expect it ain't her first time away from home—but it ain't treating the girl you're going to marry some day, square—now is it? I'd think of that, Ross, you know it's going to hurt your mother and Opal—and all you're getting out of it is a lot of selfish animal passion. I ain't any stranger for this puritan stuff that you speak of than you are, but some way or other America has got a lot of fine 'sas, and if I was a young man startin' home, I'd try to line up with the fine ideas instead of with—well, this," and he waved his hand over the littered room.

"I think the world of her and I'm going to marry her," declared Ross.

"If you really love her and if you are going to take her back to Clearwater and be proud of her and all that, I ain't a word to say... only, it'd 'a' been a finer thing to do to have brought her around and showed her to your mother and Opal before slipping off like this. I've got to be showing pretty soon now but I won't breathe a word to your mother. I want her to think just as much of you as ever she did. Let the postals keep on coming." His voice broke. "I wish you'd come out and see us as soon as you can... it gets kinda lonesome sometimes." He brightened. "I think you'd like it out there—you know, it's a whooping big place."

Fleurie came with the champagne. "We haven't got anything to serve it in but teacups," said Ross.

The cups were in the rusty dripping sink, with the remains of breakfast clinging to them, and Fleurie started washing them briskly. "I don't mind that," said Pike lightly. "Lots of people in America never had it any other way."

The champagne and some cakes that Fleurie found were disposed of. "I'm going out and stretch my legs a bit," said Pike, "and I want you to talk it over with Fleurie. I wouldn't be chinchy with her. God knows if she has to live like this she can't be rolling in wealth. When I come back I know what I hope you'll do," and he put his hand on Ross's shoulder with sudden affection and his voice trembled—"I hope you'll come with me to Mont d'Or. But remember, if you don't nobody in this world'll ever know it from me."

The boards creaked, his head bent under the low door, and the tall, slightly stooped figure passed out.

When Pike returned, an hour later, Ross was alone. "She's just gone," he said. "I'll go out with you to-night and think it over."

"There she is," said Pike, as they came in sight of Mont d'Or. "Don't she loom up? Makes the Comanche Hotel look like a boarding-house." He was pathetically eager for it to make a good impression on Ross, for, if he could make him like it, he would be able to keep him away from temptation. "Of course I was kidding it this afternoon and maybe you got the wrong idea of it because I was sort of letting myself go, but, really, it's a crackerjack," he enthused. "You're going to like it. It hit me a terrible wallop the first time I saw it. Now ain't it pretty? Look at all them cupolas and steeples and top-knots—don't they set off nice?" He got Ross to say that it was a pretty sight. "We're all crazy about it. Your mother walks around as if she was on Broadway, Heaven. It's one of the most interesting places I ever saw in my life. There's an oublette down in about the sixteenth subcellar where they used to drop their prisoners. Think of the people who must have died down there. We'll get some flashlights and explore it to-morrow. And we'll let down the old drawbridge and see how it works. Why, Ross, this whole thing is just like a museum—something different in every room. They've got a history of the place in two volumes—two, mind you—and another volume is missing. Then there's the Napoleon room. Think of that, Ross the very bed that Napoleon slept in! Maybe he worked out one of his big campaigns while 'laying' there. Who knows? It's enough to stir a fellow all up."

CHILDREN TAKE IT AND LIKE IT

He continued with the wonders of Mont d'Or.

The bell rang, as it always did at the arrival of the seigneur's carriage or car, and the servants came tumbling out.

"That's our louse crew," said Pike. "I'll bet Henry Ford himself hasn't got as many."

As Pike and Ross stepped upon the drawbridge, Mrs. Peters and Opal appeared and stared in amazement.

"Look what the old cat's found!" called Pike gayly. "Picked him up in Paris. Happened to run across him—just back from Monte Carlo."

The family clamoured around Ross in joyous welcome. The guest of all was Pike. The little chattering group started on a tour of inspection. Pike placed himself as leader; a talking, youthful, ebullient mood was upon him, and, running one arm through Ross's and the other through Mrs. Peters's, he led them merrily through the great echoing pile.

"What's that?" asked Ross as they paused before the tiny stove in the high hall.

"It's for heating the hall and stairway," explained Pike. "Good idea, isn't it? The heat goes up and keeps the hall warm. The rooms have fireplaces too."

Room after room they showed Ross, Pike enlarging upon their wonders.

"This is our bedroom," said Mrs. Peters as they entered the room where Pike and Mrs. Peters slept.

Pike gave a start, for in the dim light a man seemed to be lying across the foot of his bed. Even after the noise of their entrance it continued to lie there supinely with its thin ghostly legs falling sharply over the edge of the bed. And yet it was not a man, for no human being, alive or dead, could take that impossible position.

"What's that?" demanded Pike.

"That's your new evening suit," and then as Pike came closer he saw that it was so Mrs. Peters had sent a business suit to a tailor and had this black, depressing object made as she said she would.

There was a slight movement in the door and a noseless figure was standing in it. Pike gave a start. The man appeared to be about forty years old and was dressed in solemn black, with a small black tie, and now he stood with his hands at his side as if in some stiff military pose. His eyes were set straight ahead of him and he neither spoke nor moved, but continued to stand as solemn and as silent as a shadow.

"Who's that?"

"Francois," answered Mrs. Peters calmly.

"Your valet," she replied. "He has just laid out your dinner clothes." (To be Continued)

A Simple Treatment For Children's Colds

Cold in the head is very common at this time of the year, especially in the very young. Neglect of a cold is prone to lead to serious consequences. To relieve all congestion of the system is the first step in treating a cold, whether in infants or adults. For the very young, Baby's Own Tablets are the ideal means of doing this. Containing no narcotics or other harmful drugs they soothe the child's fretfulness, relieve its suffering and ensure convalescence.

Baby's Own Tablets are without an equal for relieving indigestion, constipation and colic. They check diarrhoea; break up colds and simple fevers; promote health-giving sleep and make the dreaded teething period easy. The Tablets are the one medicine that a mother can give her little ones with perfect safety as they are guaranteed to be free from injurious drugs. They are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Farmer's Meeting

The Annual Egg Circle Meeting will be held in Central Bedouque Hall, Monday, February 10th at 7:30 P. M. Reports of Farmer's Week Meetings will be given, also rebate cheques. Everybody welcome.

Narrow Escape From Niagara

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont. Feb. 4.—Less than 500 yards from the brink of Niagara Falls, Harry Bartley, 24, was rescued from a floating ice cake early yesterday by a tug crew from the local power company's plant.

He was rushed to a hospital, suffering intensely from the cold, but shortly after treatment was able to tell the authorities of a struggle waged throughout the night against the relentless current of the rivers.

He started out late yesterday, to cross the river in a rowboat, but got caught in a swirling mass of ice which knocked both oars from his grasp. Unable to control his flimsy craft, Bartley drifted down stream all night. Approaching the Falls, the current carried him more swiftly toward almost certain death. In despair he leaped from his boat and managed to crawl out of the water on to an ice cake when the abandoned row(boat) pitched momentarily over the brink of the Falls then swept over into the boiling waters below.

Bartley's ice cake haven, however, proved only temporary safety, for the current suddenly swept it out into the river. Bartley said he had given up all hope of being rescued when the power crew succeeded in their valiant effort to reach him.

DOUBTS IF CANADA REALIZES WORTH

LONDON, Feb. 4.—The doubt whether Canadians realized the great future that was in store for them was expressed by General Jan Christian Smuts, former prime minister of South Africa in a speech before the South African luncheon club today on his recent visit to the Dominion and the United States. "There is something growing up in the Dominion which promises very great things for the British Commonwealth of nations," he added.

The famous soldier and statesman said he found his visit to Canada had been most exhilarating. He had seen a spirit of hopefulness and optimism which was most refreshing. In the course of a few generations Canada would be as great as the United States was today he added. "It is a great thought that it will be possible for Canada to realize her very great destiny right inside the British Commonwealth of nations without any thought of severance," he concluded.

CYPRUS REQUEST FIRMLY REFUSED

LONDON, February 5.—Great Britain has refused the request of residents of Cyprus, Mediterranean Isle, for permission to affiliate themselves with Greece or a grant of some form of responsible government. The answer of Lord Passfield, Secretary of State for the Colonies, was firmly worded: "This subject is definitely closed and cannot profitably be discussed further."

The words were contained in a memorial from Greek members of the Cyprus Legislative Council dated last July. The memorial claimed to have signatures representing five-sixths of the population of the Island. A similar plea for annexation by Greece instead of continuing under British administration was made by a deputation from Cyprus which visited London last November.

The plea for a "responsible government" in the Island also was refused because "the time has not yet come when it will be to the general advantage of the people of Cyprus to make trial of a constitutional experiment in this direction."

Cyprus has an area of 3,584 square miles; its population in 1921 was 310,715, including 61,000 Mohammedans. It was settled by Greeks and Phoenicians at an early date and was part of the Persian and Roman Empire. The Turks conquered it in 1571 and retained possession until it was ceded to Great Britain for administrative purposes in 1878.

The Island was annexed in 1914 and in 1925 was given the status of a colony.

Card of Thanks

To the Electors of Charlottetown Ladies and Gentlemen:

After many solicitations on the part of ratepayers in this Ward I have again decided to offer myself as candidate for Councillor. Two years ago I had the pleasure of meeting every voter personally. This year, however, I may be unable to see each voter before election day. I therefore take this means to acquaint you of my nomination and to earnestly solicit your support previous to, and your vote on election day. I am standing four square for the legitimate rights of the laboring man of this City, and if elected will make every effort to raise the present scale of wages. It will be my endeavour to bring the shipping interests and labor to a mutual understanding and agreement. I stand for strict economy in civic expenditures, more especially when luxuries are concerned, and for a cleaner and healthier city.

Yours very sincerely,
T. W. L. PROWSE

Card of Thanks

To the Electors of Charlottetown Ladies and Gentlemen:

Please accept my hearty thanks for the high honor you have done me in electing me, by acclamation, Mayor of Charlottetown for the next two years. I fully appreciate the confidence which you have placed in me and I shall endeavor to merit that confidence by rendering you faithful and efficient service as head of the Civic Administration so far as it lies in my power to do so.

Yours very sincerely,
T. W. L. PROWSE

Card of Thanks

To the Electors of Ward Five Ladies and Gentlemen:

Having been written upon by several delegations and electors of Ward Five I have nominated as candidate for the election to take place February 12th. I have been a resident of this city for 25 years and always lived in Ward Five. If elected will do all I can for the city in general. Ward Five in particular.

I remain, yours sincerely,
WALTER E. BURKE.

Card of Thanks

To the Electors of Ward Three Ladies and Gentlemen:

As your representative for the past two years I trust you will see your way clear to support me in the coming Civic Election. During my term we made quite a number of improvements in this ward but there are several more to be made. My interests are not only in the ward I represent but the city in general. I promise to support everything that comes up for the good of the city and to oppose all measures that have a tendency to destroy the good work already accomplished with regard to economy. As time is short for a general canvass I earnestly solicit your support on Election Day through the columns of the press.

Yours for an up-to-date city,

Card of Thanks

To the Electors of Ward Five Ladies & Gentlemen:

Once again I offer to Ward Five and the citizens in general my services as Councillor in the forth-coming civic election. My record for the past four years is before you and it is for you to decide whether or not I am entitled to your support. If you do me the honor of electing me, I shall as in the past give the best service possible within my power. Owing to pressure of business I will be unable to make a personal canvass, and I therefore take this opportunity of soliciting your support, which I will appreciate. Thanking you in advance for same, I remain

Respectfully yours,
