Prices Committee Probe Continues

OTTAWA, April 26 - (CP) - Profits in the packing industry are largely based on costs and "whatever competitors allow us to take" the special Prices Committee was told today. The committee derived its information from officials of Swift Canadian Co. Ltd. in the course of 90 minutes questioning by counsel H. A. Dyde and Jean Lesage (L. - Montserrat-Lesage) who were seeking information on the way meat prices are established. The company officials, led by president A. E. Millard, emphasized the cost factor. The explanation did not entirely satisfy either Mr. Dyde or Mr. Lesage. After this phase of the probe had continued for an hour, R. E. Swan, general supervisor of beef operations, said: "We take whatever our competitors allow us to take." "Competition wouldn't allow us to take an exorbitant profit," Mr. Millard interposed.

Freight Rates Issue Discussed In Commons By Prince Co. Member

Following is the report of the remarks of Mr. J. Watson MacNaught, M.P., for Prince, on the freight rates issue as reported in Hansard of April 27: Mr. J. W. MacNaught (Prince): It is not my intention to debate at this late stage of the debate to delay the House for more than a few minutes. I feel, however, that I should make just a few remarks on this most important subject. Almost without exception every speaker so far has reiterated the fact that the railways are entitled to additional revenue. Most of the opposition seems to be directed toward the fact that the government did not prevent the order from going into effect at once. The opposition members, more particularly those from the Maritimes, have stated time and again that editorial opinion in the Maritimes is directed against the increase. I consider it important that I should point out that an editorial recently appearing in the Charlottetown Patriot, and written by the Hon. Cyrus Macmillan, one of the members of the Duncan commission, whose report has just been quoted with much approval in this House, is just to the opposite effect. This editorial appeared on April 19, and I shall make one or two brief quotations from it: "The decision of the Board of Transport Commissioners to allow the railways an increase in freight rates of 21 per cent -" Mr. Graydon: This was ruled on yesterday, Mr. Speaker. Mr. MacNaught: I continue: "not 30 per cent as the railways requested, is still causing wide discussion, much of it ill-considered, uninformed and illogical in its bordering on illogical hysteria in its prophesy of result..." Mr. Graydon: Once again I say this was ruled on yesterday. Mr. MacNaught: I continue: "Protests against the increase of rates are still loud and at times inaccurate in their implications." Mr. Graydon: I rise to a point of order. Mr. Deputy Speaker: What is the point of order? Mr. MacNaught: There is no point of order. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon) is trying to be smart. Mr. Graydon: No one seems to have recognized the point of order involved. I should think Your Honour would, because it was your ruling yesterday. Mr. Deputy Speaker: I just came into the chair. Mr. Graydon: I understand that. For that reason, perhaps I had better bring Your Honour up to date. Yesterday the hon. member for King's (Mr. Grant) attempted, I think he said, to paraphrase and I take him in his word. I always take his word. But in any event, he said he was going to paraphrase an editorial which was written by Cyrus Macmillan and which, I understand, suited some of my hon. friends on the other side of the House. He was about to read it into the record, but Your Honour refused him that privilege, and I think perhaps properly so. But I do not think this editorial - Mr. Grant: I did not read it. Mr. Graydon: Just a minute it would be nice to hear the hon. member, but I should like to go further in my remarks. Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Mr. Graydon: It seems to me that we should not allow this editorial to take flight around from one member to another in order to have it read. I should think what is sauce for the goose should be sauce for the gander. I suggest that the goose and gander ought to be treated alike. Mr. Knowles: Which is which? Mr. Graydon: I will leave that for the public to decide. Mr. MacNaught: On the point of order, I wish to refer to Beauchesne, third edition, 1943, notation 262. Mr. Low: We are governed by May. Mr. MacNaught: The notation reads: "The practice of reading extracts from newspapers to support an argument in debate has been followed in the British House since 1846, when Speaker Peel, with the

THREE FOR EGYPT

By Violet M. McElroy "I'm sorry about the signal," she said. But, of course, it was only a faint chance that any plane would ever see it. "It wasn't so much that" Lovelace answered unexpectedly. "But we made the thing together and I hated the idea of those brutes destroying it, spoiling it. Oh, well I suppose it doesn't matter! You don't care, anyway, so that's all right. How's Hamid's arm this morning?" The abrupt change of subject was as unlike the Rafe of old memories as were the words which preceded it, but Kay was too tired and preoccupied to puzzle her brain over the matter. It seemed taken for granted that no more attempts to fetch water should be made until after dark. The lack of any occupation was a drag upon the passing of the hours, and it was almost a relief when a movement was noticed among the Bedaween towards the middle of the unending afternoon. "Reinforcements," Lovelace commented grimly, when an Arab rider could be seen galloping furiously towards the oasis. "Seems to be only one of them though, so he won't go far in that line." Sherwin screwed up his eyes against the sun's glare. The newcomer, with flying cloak and waving arms, whirled into, in a cloud of dust to the tall tribesman who appeared to be the leader of the nomads, and an excited conversation followed, in which several of the other Arabs joined. They seemed to be hearing news which made them both angry and nervous more than that, news which caused them to assume a different and threatening attitude towards the garrison of the oasis. There was a closing-in, a general movement of the besiegers to surround the little shrine. "Looks as though they'd heard something that made them want to hurry up things," Jacobson said uneasily. "Say, Sydney, what's going to happen if they turn nasty and try to rush us?" "We'd have to put up the best fight we could with two guns." Lovelace said. "Just shoot through the grating eh? Get inside the tomb and block up the opening as quick as we can. It won't do to be caught outside." The producer vanished through the low opening like a rabbit into his hole. Dawn was already inside, but Kay, who had been attending to Hamid's shoulder, continued to bathe the wound. "I'll just finish this," she glanced up at the two other men. And then Hamid can come inside - it's so difficult to manage the dressing when we're cramped up together in there, and the light's so bad." "Better be quick then, Mrs. Hellyar!" Sherwin was watching the Arabs rather nervously. They seem to be collecting together round this side, I shouldn't wonder if they made a rush and tried to cut us off." "Yes, I don't much like the look of them," Lovelace standing beside the cave examined his automatic. "Keep your gun ready, Val and - Ah! They're coming!" Shouting wildly and brandishing their long muskets three Arabs separated themselves from their companions and raced towards the tomb. They were within fifty yards when Lovelace fired wounding the foremost in the arm, while Sherwin's almost simultaneous shot missed its mark entirely. "Get inside, Kay - get inside!" Lovelace cried. "Cover her, Val - I believe those brutes have their eyes on her, mean to try to take her prisoner." He fired again just as the two Arabs reached the cave and began to scramble over it. Their dark, hawklike faces and predatory eyes were fiercely triumphant, one of them stretched out a sinewy arm and actually clutched at Kay's shoulder as she bent to help Hamid, urging him towards the entrance of the shrine. The grimy fingers had almost closed upon the girl's arms when Lovelace flung himself upon their owner, grappling with him, striking with the now empty revolver. "Get inside, Kay - get her away, Val!" he grasped. "Ah, would you, you swine!" The second Arab had rested his weapon on the side of the cave and was carefully aiming it direct at

In Memoriam In loving memory of my dear Mother and Grandmother, Mrs. Hannah J. Whitlock, who departed this life April 25th, 1943. The month of April is here again. One of the saddest of all the year. The blow was hard, the shock severe. To part with one we loved so dear. I am thinking today dear Mom and Grandma. Thinking of the past. Picturing you in memory just as I saw you last. Sweetest memory always lingers. To a grave not far away. Where we laid our darling Mother and Grandmother. Just five years ago today. Lovingly Remembered by Her Daughter, May and Grandchildren, Walter, Stephen, Marie, Thompson, Hunter River, P. E. I.

SCIATIC PAINS RELIEVED QUICKLY The distress of sciatic pains can often be given relief quickly with Nerviline. Massage vigorously, rubbing lots of Nerviline in quite deeply. Plenty of rubbing won't do any harm and will help materially in the acute stages. Carry out this treatment every three hours, massaging from five to 15 minutes each time. In chronic conditions massage three times a day. You will find that when applied to muscular and rheumatic aches and pains, Nerviline works quickly and oh, so effectively. Help to rub your muscular pains away with penetrating Nerviline. (To Be Continued)
