YESTERDAY two countrymen came to the city and spent the day drinking. Shortly after six o'clock they started for home, one helplessly drunk lying in the bottom of the cart. The other undertook to drive, but he found the navigation of the team with its unnatural load was too much of a charge and he decided to hail a citizen for advice. The advice given was to call on the Marshall. After receiving the desired information he drove the horse to the police station and told Marshall Cameron that he had a friend in the cart, and that he did not know what to do with him. The Marshall quickly took in the situation, locked the man up and put the horse out to board.
