

The Guardian, Charlottetown, Fri., Sept. 12, 1969

ACROSS THE ISLAND

Hospital Provides Material For Column

By NEIL A. MATHESON

I've written a number of columns from the hospital in the last six or seven years and have found they are generally popular. So here's another – it's been suggested by several of the nurses who gave me such good care in the Prince Edward Island Hospital while I was there for several weeks in late August.

My heart condition placed me in the "Intensive Care" division of the hospital where absolute bed rest was required and even talking was frowned on except in really small doses.

I thought at first "How am I going to get material for a column in a place like this?"

My fears vanished quickly, however, as interesting bits came to me with no effort on my part.