KEEPING COOL, AND GETTING PAID FOR IT

With the temperature well over 100 on an outside set, comedian Dick Van Dyke decides he'll just stay in the mud and cool with an aspid from actress Jerry Maxwell, wielding the hose. It happened on the set of "What a Way to Go", the script calling for fishermen Van Dyke to fall into the mud puddle. He did—then decided he'd just sit there for a few minutes while Jerry

ELLEN'S DIARY

Maples Flame Into Scarlet Against The Hazy Horizon

Autumn! And when we come to gather up chips at the chopping-block by the woodshed, to have them in readiness to kindle or rekindle our hearth fire we stop there a long moment to look out along the valley, and the ripening now of the year.

The alders marking the course of the stream where it flows millward in the field across the creek by the roadside, are in the bud leaf now, a perfect complement to the yellowing foliage of the oaks there, or the maple now bursting into scarlet or crimson flame. Or orange-red, or the blending of the two, as we believe. There Nature's own secret. There it is, sunny as the gold of the meadow flowers, of summer, one of Autumn's most attractive shades.

The fields in their checkered patches appear up, prettily green, or in the neutral tint of ripened grasses, or harvested, or in stubble. By the hedgerows, the groves and woodlands they go, off to the hills of the horizon, drily scarlet in the sunshine, with a filmy haze of blue.

We look for some fault in the overall picture—colours mixed, creating a discord, as music jars the ear when a note is misplaced. But there is none. Perfect the scene is. So seasonally beautiful in its shades and shadings, one wonders why an

MARY HAWORTH

Man Discovers Himself Capable Of Foul Deed

Dear Mary Haworth: I am a man in my mid-forties, married to a kind and loving woman, but father of four children who are devoted to us.

Our family life has been replete with joy and happiness. I recently I was so fooled by a woman of much experience that I found it easier to remain silent and pretend nothing ever happened.

She has great love for me and the courage of a strong true character. But I know I have hurt her. And she is still in a state of shock; confused in her thinking, with a temporary loss of memory.

She continues outwardly to be kind, industrious and loving. But I feel the weight of her loneliness and sorrow. How can I help her?

Dear F.R.: You write as a man in flight from hell, as if you had escaped the devil's grip just before the gates clanged shut.

Am I correct in construing that you were, for a while, so hypnotized that you were planning to destroy your family in circumstances that would appear accidental?

The dark intensity of your guilt sense and your obsessive reference to some dreadful wrong you almost committed (but did not) suggests that you may have contemplated some denigrated act of violence against the innocent.

Also the acuteness of your wife's shock reaction (mental confusion and loss of memory) connotes a very major shock incident, suggests a discovery of your sick-sick intention, now repeated, may have happened when you were just on the verge of trying it out.

In any case, whatever the facts be, the fortunate result at this moment is: you had a change of heart in time. And for that inestimable blessing,

Save steps when you tidy up—put two things into the handy pockets of this gay cotton apron. Easy to fit. Printed Pattern 450: Misses' Sizes Small (10, 12); Medium (14, 16); Large (18, 20). Medium, 2 1/2 yards. Single Embroidery design included.
