

Nova Scotia Farmers Reporting One Of Their Largest Hay Crops In Years

HALIFAX (CP) — Nova Scotia farmers are reporting one of their largest hay crops in years and the provincial department of agriculture says the secret lies in the application of nitrogen fertilizers in the spring.

Biggest successes have been reported in north-eastern Nova Scotia on farms in the vicinity of the province's experimental farm at Nappan, near Amherst, N. S., where the project was started.

In experiments at Nappan, plots that received ammonium nitrate at the rate of 45 pounds an acre on the Timothy crop showed increased yield, the amount of increase depending on previous fertility treatments.

The Timothy is being rotated with oats and clover on a three-year plan.

Acres that received phosphate and potash fertilizer on the oat crop, and nitrogen in the early necessary fertility treatments during rotation.

It has been figured in the Nappan tests that an investment of $2 an acre for nitrogen fertilizer gave an increased return of $7.50 for the hay crop, or a profit of approximately $5 an acre.

With the results of the experiment at Nappan proving that nitrogen used as a fertilizer can raise the hay output, farmers in various other parts of the province are planning to give nitrogen a try next spring.

Research officer L. B. MacLeod at Nappan, said that yield increases of this nature could not be expected unless the soil is properly managed and is supplied with the spring on the hay crop, showed a yield increase of 40 per cent.

The average increase on plots receiving this small application of nitrogen, over those were not treated, was three-quarters of a ton of hay an acre.

The first faculty of household science at the University of Toronto operated from 1906 to 1908, and was re-instituted in 1924.
