WEAKNESS OF MEN

Up in my red room I desired to have a unique dressing case built around the window and now I have it in a most convenient form, where one can sit comfortably for the putting on and taking off of boots and slippers.

This may seem a bit improbable, but just try, and you will see how well it will work. Only be careful about getting your boxes of odd heights and sizes.—New York Recorder.

THE LINEN CLOSET.

What It Should Be and Some of the Things It Should Contain.

The woman who would relentlessly sacrifice a "cozy corner" or a "dressing room" in order that she might have an ample linen closet is the housewife who is considerably cooled and the risk of a closet is too frequently left of the sideboard drawers, with a bottom bureau drawer or two. And the owner of such a linen closet is she who whose tablecloths are always mysteriously disappearing, whose napkins seem to be frequently broken, and who cannot tell "where the towels go."

All the household linen should be kept in one place—a dry, light closet, if possible, or a chest of drawers. A variety of the belonging of the closet should be tucked up in a prominent position, and when any article is discarded, it should be struck out from the list. The shelves, if a closet is used, should not be higher than may be conveniently reached, and they should be covered with stout, white paper. The various sorts of belonging of the closet should be arranged in their place, sheets first, and so on.

The usual list of the necessary supplies for a well-ordered household mentions as requisite four sheets, six pillow slips and two spreads for each bed; four bath towels and seven handkerchiefs or damask ones for each member of the family; seven crash bath towels for the kitchen, twelve soft crash towels for dishes, and five glass towels; two dozen napkins each for dinner, breakfast, luncheon and tea, and half a dozen doilies to match each set; two luncheon cloths, one tea cloth, two breakfast cloths, four dinner cloths and four tray cloths; with as many pretty bureau, sideboard, shelf and stand covers and centerpieces as one can afford.—New York World.

To Dispel Cold

Headaches and fevers, to cleanse the system effectually, yet gently, when coffee or bilious, or when the blood is impure or sluggish, to permanently cure habitual constipation, to awaken the kidneys and liver to a healthy activity, without irritating or weakening them, use Syrup of Figs.

HUNDREDS of ladies in ill health have been or are being restored to health and strength by the use of Hawker's Tonic it has become the great and popular family remedy.

HOUSE AND HOMETALKS.

SOME INSTRUCTIVE CHAT ON SUBJECTS OF FEMINE INTEREST.

Paying Her Social Debts—A Young Woman Who Lives in a Boarding House Has Discovered How Even She May Discharge Them Agreeably.

The names of the women who live in single rooms in boarding houses, and yet are so soon able to receive their friends of entertainers, is legion. One of their number, says The New York World, has decided that it may be done, and has made an excellent beginning in that direction.

Her room is—or was—an ordinary looking, moderately large back one on the second floor of an ordinary boarding house. She turned it into a charming apartment by the expenditure of a great deal of time and thought and the giving up of her new winter frock. The bed was banished and a luxurious cot lounge was substituted, with denim cover and a small table, sideboard and chair. There was a leather-clothed chair up at a bargain, to suit the view of the wasteland.

A set of box bookshelves served the triple purpose of bookcase, sideboard and chest, by being stained and having a door with hinges swing over one long box. Daily she and white china, a copper-cased silver coffee pot, occupied the sideboard. All sorts of pretty photographs in pretty frames hung about the walls, and a grate fire completed the coziness of the room.

In the closet, every Saturday night, are stored shoes, cracker, cheese, bread and butter, lettuce, a little celery, coffee and sugar, all in their proper places. Every Sunday the lady—after a consideration—cooks and chops up a chicken. Every Sunday the young woman makes cakes and for the preparation of which she is justly famous, and this bread and butter sandwiches. Some- times she toasts some crackers over the grate. She has a delicatessen coffee in the Russian coffee pot. And every Sunday afternoon she is "at home" to her friends, disposing the duties from an old mahogany table in the corner. She does not spend a fortune in entertaining, but all the people who "drop in" during the long afternoon have the best sort of a time, and she cares no social debts.

ALL AROUND THE HOUSE.

Hints About Dressing Over Old Furniture.

A table which I have just made is success.

I took three broom handles, cut them the length desired for legs, and gave them two coats with white paint.

Then I had a carpenter make me a square board for the top. This I also painted white, fastened the legs to it with screws, and the head of which was painted white.

Where the legs are crossed I fastened, it securely with wire and put a bow of ribbon there.

If one wished to have this table in a pink, blue or green room the painting could be done in the desired color.

I find that much can be done in the way of making things up in the corner, as one girl bachelor know says when she builds a gown out of scraps, but you must have ingenuity and patience.

The teaching box offers no end of possibilities, and they can be made to be ornamental as well as useful.

JUST SIMPLY STOP BREATHING.

That is Said to be a Sure Way to Avoid Colds.

It is a fact not generally known that if a person holds his breath and does not breathe, he will not catch a cold. The skin practically becomes a coat of mail against the cold. The moment a particle of air escapes from the lungs the stings will penetrate. In explanation of this curious fact a well-known physician advances the theory that holding the breath partially closes the pores of the skin, and thus leaves no opening for attack. This interesting statement explains and enhances the value of a practice I have followed for the prevention of colds. For many years my occupation took me to crowded political and labor meetings, generally held in rooms destitute of any means of ventilation. The heat was intense, the air fetid and poisonous. I have left such meetings bathed in perspiration and plunged into the chill air of a winter's night, thereby running the risk of catching the severest cold. Yet, strange to say, I enjoyed a singular immunity from such aggravating ailments. At the first touch of cold air I took a deep inspiration, and then held my breath for half a minute, in the meantime walking as fast as I could. The result was that the pores of the skin were closed against the chilling atmosphere, and by the time the lungs called for revivification the body had considerably cooled and the risk of a chill was over. I recommend this practice to public speakers, vocalists, entertainers, and those who are obliged to frequent such rooms. In my own case the practice never failed, and although I fully believe in its value I never understood the reason of it until a learned scientist forwarded me the remarkable theory that while holding the breath the skin could be maintained impenetrable to the sting of a bee.—James Miller Monthly.

The Late Professor Jewett.

The author of the most famous and most misquoted of all the epigrams upon Professor Jewett has sent to the Westminster Gazette an interesting note upon his lines, "Several versions," he writes, "do not consider them improvements." The lines were written:

First come I, my name is Jewett, There's no knowledge but I love it, I am master of this college, What I don't know—so's knowledge.

The Engraver's Reply.

The Elder was talking recently to one of Jewett's best wood-engravers, and asked him whether his eye did not suffer from so continually squinting through the magnifying glass. "Yes," said he; "but, if anything, it is the other eye. I really think it gets stronger and better by exercise, and, of the two, the eye I do not use is the inferior. Of course, this is only my individual case."—Boston Globe.

LIFE'S SUNSET ALL AGLOW.

Wife and I were the first settlers in Moro, Aroostook Co., Me., 41 yrs. ago. It was then a vast wilderness. SKODA'S DISCOVERY cured us, and we are again floating down life's river with all bright and smooth before us.
