

First water bottles must be filled with water. Yet upon the realization that the new students will be needing dehydration near the ocean, the decision is unanimous that beer is a better decision. Beer wasn't actually put in the bottles. It went directly into the leaders' bellies.

The hundreds and hundreds of bottles were put in cardboard boxes and loaded onto a trolley. Soon the trolley became jammed between two doors. Through much discussion and brainstorming the men were able to overcome this major obstacle and continue down the hall.

No new student wants to drink water that is as warm as hot piss. But upon arrival at the food waste fridge the trolley wouldn't fit. To overcome this situation the help of many more men was needed. Soon a plan was hatched on how to pick up chicks.

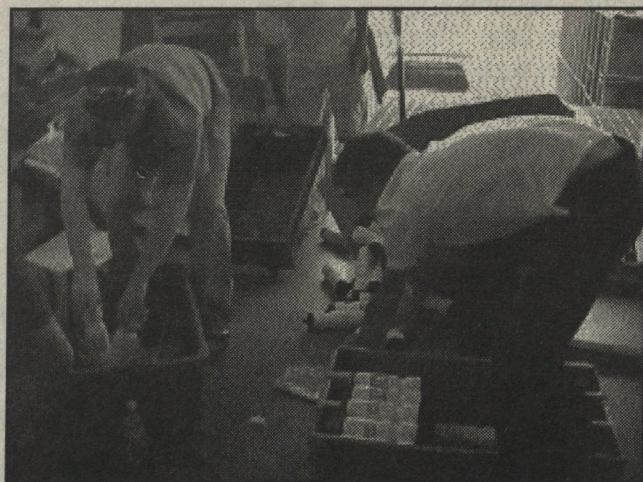

Water is heavy, but cardboard is light. So a bunch of strong men can easily pick up the damp cardboard boxes. And then put them on a piece of wood. These men are clearly too engrossed in their work to think of future events. Soon it will be "Time for Tim's"

How to Move Water Bottles: Demonstration by Men

by Thomas LLOYD

Who could have foreseen this? Look at all the spilled water bottles all over the floor. Men start backing away and start looking for women. All the females recognize what is going on and keep a safe distance. The men are left to their own devices to clean up.

"This is the kind of monotonous, repetitive work that makes me look forward to NSO each and every year." -Donny Killorn
"I'll race you to see who can get more water bottles in a crate. That's cheating! Your top layer is disqualified!" -Jeremy Beck

After a few hours of moving two boxes the men deserve a cold drink.
