The Courage of Quiet Lives.

You tell me of the olden days, When in the time of war The women all their jewels gave— Withheld not even their hair!

You tell me of self-sacrifice, Of soldiers brave and strong, To whom 'e'en death had nought of dread, Who fought against the wrong;

Who fought and in the battle died, Who would not yield nor quail, Though shot and shell around them fell Like withering blast of hail.

But I would sing of humble life, Of loving maids and wives, Who, every day, for love's sweet sake, Are offering up their lives.

Battles are fought of which the world Can never, never hear; Who knows the fight it takes to give A smile instead of a tear?

That white but calm and tearless face Is full of anxious care; Though grief is eating out her heart, Its sadness none may share.

That mother with a gentle smile Is grieving for her son; With you she talks, but all her thoughts Are with him, everyone.

Although she wears a cheerful face, Alone her heart doth brood O'er those she ne'er can cease to mourn, Nor would she if she could.

And she most saintly seems to me Who suffers and forbears, Who does not even yield herself The luxury of tears. E. L. F.

Does Any One Know Him?

Out of the street, after ringing a bell or two, Into the house, with a rish and a yell or two, Kitchenward, lured by a savory smell or two— Dinner inspires him with joy!

Off goes his hat, with a dextrous fling to it; Off goes the cat with a mischievous string to it; Up starts the baby, because he will sing to it—

Any one know such a boy?

Wild with his comrades as any Comanche is; Rough as a steer on a far western ranch he is; Surely of mischief the root and the branch he is;

Yet there's poor gold in alloy. Tender and true at the hearts core, though small he is;

Brave and chivalric, whatever befalls, he is; Mother's own torment and blessing through all he is—

Any one know such a boy? —Selected.

A Transformation.

MRS. EMMA ROBINSON.

While on a journey westward, I was compelled to wait for several hours in the depot of one of our large cities. A small party near me attracted my attention. One of them was a beautiful, stylishly-dressed young lady, who would receive admiration in any place, for her lovely appearance and charming manner.

There was a bright-looking, handsome, gentlemanly boy of about eleven years, and two elderly ladies, one of whom I judged was his mother.

I learned from their conversation that the boy and his mother were leaving the city, and as they were very near me I could not help hearing some of the conversation.

The young lady said, "Harry, did you get the bottle of wine?" Harry said, "No, I forgot it." "Well, go and get it now, for I want you to have it."

The boy went out and after a few minutes returned with a bottle in his hand. The young lady took it and examined the brand, remarking that this wine was of a superior quality, and she knew he would like it.

The loveliness of that young lady faded, and I saw, instead of the dark eyes and beautiful complexion of a charming woman, the evil light of the wily tempter shining through that handsome exterior.

Who can estimate the effects of that deed? Possibly the loss of a soul. It may mean unpeppable anguish to more than one loving heart, and whose fault? Not the wine seller's! Not the wine-maker's. Not the boy's, but the fault of the young lady who offered it.

Monte Vista, Col.

A Worthy Example.

Mr. Samuel F. Jones, a prominent criminal lawyer of Hartford, Connecticut, recently declared in the police court in that city that he would not thereafter appear in the criminal courts as counsel for men accused of violating liquor laws.

Having been asked by a newspaper reporter for his reasons for this action, Mr. Jones said there was a decided feeling, not confined to professed temperance people, that something must be done to stop the ravages of intemperance. Business men of every class knew that they were being taxed to care and provide for an army of the poor and unfortunate, to say nothing of the criminal classes, reduced to their low condition by drink. All the misery from this cause gathered in prisons, insane asylums and charitable institutions was tolerated in order that a few men might make money.

There was no disguising the fact that commodities, unhealthy and poisonous, were sold right there in Hartford under the guise of spirituous liquors. Vigorous efforts were being made in that and adjoining states to create a public sentiment against liquor drinking. Some of their best criminal lawyers, Mr. Jones said, publicly refused to appear in court as defenders or apologists for men charged with breaking the liquor laws, and, for his part, he had become personally disgusted with the whole liquor traffic. Therefore, although not a professional abstainer, he should thereafter have nothing to do with the defence of men accused of violating the liquor law.

Strengthened by Example.

HOW A YOUNG MAN WAS ENCOURAGED TO RESIST TEMPTATION.

At a large dinner party a guest was asked if she would have some plum pudding with wine sauce.

"I will have some of the plum pudding, but none of the wine sauce," was her reply.

Her friends laughed at her, and insisted that she should take some, but she replied: "I decline upon principle. I take no alcohol in any form."

The conversation turned to other topics, but after dinner a young man, whom she had noticed sitting opposite to her at dinner, approached her and, requesting a word with her, said:

"I want to tell you how much good you did me to-day by your prompt and decided rejection of the wine pudding-sauce. I had been deliberating what I would do, being strongly tempted by the smell of it, which reached me. I think I should have yielded to my desire, and the solicitations of my friends, who called my resolution a whim, if I had not heard your refusal. That gave me the courage to resist the temptation. I have an inherited appetite for strong drink, but by the grace of God I have been enabled to control it; yet if I had got a taste of wine to-day, I feel confident I should have fallen to-day."

It was a very light thing for that woman to put aside an indulgence which cost her no sacrifice whatever. By so doing she gave strength and courage to one whose feet had well nigh slipped. We need to look at these things, not merely in the light of personal desires or personal experience, but with reference to the condition and dangers of others around us. We know not what eyes are watching us; we know not who may be benefited or injured by our actions. Our decision, which may be but a passing, transient choice, may forget the fetter which shall bind some other soul in bonds never to be broken. "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak" (Rom. 14:21). "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves" (Rom. 15:1).—People's Paper.

The News in Brief.

Over an inch of rain fell in St. Paul, Minn., on Wednesday. Railway washouts are reported.

At a picnic at Union City, Mich., sixty persons were poisoned from drinking milk from uncleaned cans. All are now out of danger.

A destructive cyclone struck Port Dodge, Iowa, on Wednesday. One man was killed at Rensselaer, and a big iron bridge near there was blown away.

There is a young woman in Maine, who, on being asked where she was born, replied that she wasn't born anywhere in particular as she was the daughter of a Methodist minister.

A young man named George Houghton interfered in a dispute between Edward Rumford and his wife, at Mitchell, Ont., and Rumford struck him with a handkerchief, killing him almost instantly. The murderer has given himself up.

The Marquis de Mores has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment for attempting to incite the people against the French government, on the occasion of May day labor demonstration. Anarchist Valtes was sentenced to one month's imprisonment for a similar offence.

The anti-slavery conference at Brussels is only awaiting in order to close its labors for the consent of the United States to the imposition of import duties by the Congo free state. If this is not given the conference will have labored in vain, as Congo was unable to procure funds to enforce the anti-slavery measure decided upon by the powers.

PROPERTY IN AMHERST.—The assessors valuation of property exclusive of exemptions for the town of Amherst is $1,830,355, and the percentage of taxation 85c. on the $100.

A GROWING INSTITUTION.—At the annual meeting of the Bank of Montreal last Monday reference was made by Sir Donald Smith to the growth of the bank, beginning with a capital of $350,000, it grew in 1829 to $748,000, in 1837 to $1,000,000, in 1855 to $4,000,000, in 1870 to $6,000,000, and in 1873 to $12,000,000. With its rest it now amounts to $18,000,000. The Bank of Montreal is now the largest banking institution in the world.

TO TAKE IN THE MARITIME PROVINCES.—The Maine Universalist convention is now in session at Bangor. At Wednesday's session a motion was made to change the constitution so as to include the maritime provinces, and adopted, if the consent of the United States convention is received. If this consent is obtained the Universalist parishes in the provinces will become a part of the Maine convention.

It is natural for girls to love flowers, but they sometimes forget that young men love them, too, and appreciate the refining and elevating influence of the fair ones' handiwork in the culture and study of a flower garden. Now, dear ladies, to have flowers, they must be planted now (it is useless to sow seed too late). Gay & Son have the plants, well rooted, for sale at the Charlottetown Market and at home.
