

"The Phone Call"

Wendell Blackett

Quietly I sit for the phone to ring.
Listening for hope to sound a joyful song.
A chorus of woes, and another tearful sing,
Leads to one more empty night without the girl I have waited for so long.
Empty spaces need something to come and fill them.
Nights and days drift into months and years.
Still the flame will not be extinguished.
Only you can ease my deepest fears.
Then one day I heard the phone cry out.
I rushed, hoping that it might cheer.

Answered it and I heard her voice,
She said, "How have you been, do you have a girl."
I calmly said, "You still the one.
I have never lost my quest for you.
Do you want to come over here.
I want to tell you girl, that my love is true."
We sat for hours just discussing life.
Telling each other of our pains and emptiness.
She finally admitted that she had something for me.
All it took was one phone call to end stress and strife.
