I would like to express a few viewpoints on your article, "Sex and the College Girl", which appeared in your Jan. 19th issue of the Cadre. Most of the viewpoints that I shall express will be in disagreement with those of the above article.

Your introduction to the pill is vulgar and illiterate. You make the doctors look very unprofessional, and carefree in their work. Also you contend that the pill can be obtained like a bag of candy that you'd buy at K-Mart. Most doctors will hesitate to give a young girl the pill, if not for medical reasons, then for pure moral reasons. After all isn't it rather ignorant for one to say, "$1.98 to pay for it."? To me human life is worth more than $1.98. Are you trying to degrade the female populus or just make a good lay safer for the boys?

I shall now refer to your article where you quote "the consequences are too real, too earth-shattering to put yourself through". Then you go on to explain that you'll gain nothing by an "unwanted pregnancy", except depression and questions that you're not prepared to answer at this stage of your life plus a "strained relationship with some male who will try to be the man he supposes he now is". I ask you, "are you a member of a university where one supposes you are known as young men and young women and you still can't face reality? You still aren't prepared to answer practical questions of yourself? Then how did you ever reach university? How did you ever have intercourse and become pregnant? After all, both are realities of life aren't they?" But to you, it's a very blind facet of life and therefore you lead one to believe that you didn't have intercourse, but rather a mild form of "rape".

To me, no pregnancy is "unwanted". Maybe financially and socially it is seen as creating a problem, but any young expectant mother, married or unmarried sees her unborn child as something beautiful, something that she grows to love more each day. After all isn't child bearing life's greatest experience. And in reference to your quote "nothing to gain", I find hard to understand, no experience in life is so bad, but we learn a little from it, and child bearing is wholesome in learning for the young mother, I shall relate the strained relationship with this suppose-called man, with your next paragraph, where you quote "blaming him is a stage you may go through". One thinks that here you have your story backwards. Did you ever hear the saying, a boy proves himself a man by having sex? Don't 90% of the boys run off when they get their girl pregnant, no matter how long he went with her? Don't you think that in 90% of cases it is the male rather than the female that can't face reality, because the consequences are too earthshattering. Also 90% of the females will not blame the boy, but the boy blames the female. Aren't his usual words, "Why didn't you take the pill? Why in hell didn't you watch your days? It's not my fault. Well one can ask the young "man", why in hell didn't you use condoms or some other form of protection? Maybe he didn't because this is part of his ego, that no matter what the circumstances he'll never be the one to use protection of any kind. And if his girl gets pregnant, he'll go to those friends, who will justify his actions. He never thinks of the hurt that the female is going through, while he is justifying his earth-shattering mind.

Maybe he should put himself in her place and then his justification would be different. He would see that it is her that has the longest and hardest road ahead and deserves more than to be told off and blamed for the pregnancy. She too has feelings and problems and maybe now is when she really needs to share them with, even if adoption is going to be the child's new home. Who do you think is most responsible to her.

Now one ask the question, is either the male or the female to blame because a new life is brought into the world? A wife doesn't blame her husband or a husband blame his wife, if she's pregnant; then why place blame outside marriage? Isn't the sexual act the same. In marriage you may argue that "intimate love" is involved. But doesn't love make the world go around? Is the gold band on your finger the reason nobody is blamed for pregnancy? You claim that your at an "institution of higher learning", yet your not allowed to think for yourself. One thinks that it is at this institution of higher learning that one does think for himself, otherwise how can one gain this "countless knowledge"? One suggests a gold platter, maybe. You talk of young women who should put forth their ideas to the world, "to debate, to influence and to inspire." One ask how can young women who can't face reality or "think for themselves" present their ideas? You are critical later on, when you once again, have the young woman, understanding herself, facing consequences and even "making decisions". How wonderful, if the pill has this affect on our brain!! - to change our minds completely. Abortion should be performed only if the life of the mother or child is in danger. Otherwise, why support the Pill if you can "get rid of " the child anyhow. Of course the Pill is only $1.98 . To me, a person who fully supports abortions is a "murderer". In an illegal abortion, can you be perfectly cured within 24 hours, or compl-
