That Body of Yours

WHY THE PATIENT SHOULD REMAIN IN BED DURING AN ILLNESS

Perhaps you wonder why the physician is so anxious to keep a patient young or old—in bed during an illness. The patient is recovering rapidly and feels that if he could get up and around his appetite would improve, the bowel would act regularly and he would regain his strength in much less time. Now this would all be true if it were not for one important organ of the body—the heart. Even if no treatment were given in various ailments, except that the patients remained in bed, the chances are that they would recover in due time, so most ailments run a more or less definite course. However whether the patient is to recover or not doesn't depend so much on the disease as it does upon how the heart is able to keep up the extra work that is put upon it. If the heart is very strong it is possible that even if the patient gets up before he should he will likely get long all right and no real damage be done. On the other hand however, the average individual with the average heart may do some real damage to the heart if he asks it to do real work when it has become more or less weakened from its efforts in fighting the ailment. Fortunately a method has been found which enables the physician to actually measure the amount of work the heart is doing when the patient is resting quietly in bed, sitting up in bed, walking about the room or actually going outdoors about his work. Thus when the physician points out to the patient that even sitting up in bed means that the heart has to do twice as much and that the reserve strength of the heart is needed to fight the ailment, the patient is more willing to lie quietly in bed. The extra work the heart has to do when the patient sits up, stands up, walks around or takes a brisk walk is found by measuring the amount of oxygen the lungs have to breathe in to do the extra work. Thus sitting up needs twice as much as when the patient is lying down, standing up about three times as much, and walking around about four times as much.

ELDON W. I.
The regular monthly meeting of the Eldon Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. W. D. Gillis on Tuesday evening, March 24th, with an attendance of eleven members and two visitors. Meeting opened with the singing of Institute Ode, followed by roll call responded to with Irish Jokes. Minutes of previous meeting were then read and adopted. Standing committees were heard from and new ones appointed as follows: Sick Committee, Mrs. W. D. Gillis, Mrs. VanDerstine, Mrs. M. Moore and Mrs. MacWilliams; School Committee, Mrs. P. Penny and Mrs. Halliday. Entertainment Committee, Mrs. Bishop and Mrs. MacWilliams. After some discussion on raising funds a motion was carried that Institute make a donation to P. E. I. Hospital, each member to make a contribution of 50 cents. Correspondence included a paper from "Anti-tuberculosis League." This was approved by members and signed by President and Secretary. The secretary reported having received government grant. A very entertaining program included a spelling match put on by Mrs. Johnson, and a most interesting talk on the life of William Wordsworth by Mrs. F. W. Murphy. Some valuable miscellaneous household hints were also given. A solo and some music by Mrs. W. D. Gillis was very much enjoyed. Arrangements for next meeting at the home of Mrs. P. Penny, roll call to be answered with a household hint or recipe. During the usual social hour, the hostess served lunch and meeting closed by all repeating the Creed in unison.

His Death Grossly Exaggerated
(C.P. By Guardian's Special Wire) NEW WATERFORD, N. S., April 5.—Chief of Police Daniel Graham was quoting Mark Twain today. "Twain's quip 'the report of my death is grossly exaggerated' described Chief Graham's reaction when he read on a newspaper bulletin board that he had been in a motor accident 'and subsequently died of injuries received in the crash.' Very much alive, the Chief had that 'get your man' look on his face tonight as he sought the reporter.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY SOUGHT
And one of the details which we are most happy to report, is the fact that no effort is made to flatten down the bust; a possibility we were afraid of in this man-tailored consciousness which has come upon us. However, the more feminine influence of the Gibson Girl era has made it plain that the natural, girlish bosom is attained both in foundation garments and in the new brassieres. A gentle uplift, attaining natural curves, also assures healthful support. Lingerie this season is a delight-
