WONDERS OF THE WORLD

How They are Displayed at the Columbian Exposition. ONE DAY AT JACKSON PARK.

A Preliminary Survey Which Gives the Reader an Idea of the Scope of the Fair and How to See It.

Now that we are in Chicago and about to visit the World's fair grounds the question arises, How shall we go? There are a dozen ways of going, but we want to take the quickest way. We are near the Illinois Central station, so let's go over and catch a train. They run one every two minutes on a special track to the fair grounds, and besides the suburban trains take lots of visitors out. There are several roads running to the grounds, among them the Baltimore and Ohio, the Northern Pacific, the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern and the Pennsylvania systems.

Then there are the cable lines and the elevated road, which latter has stations at Sixty-third street and on the roof of the Transportation annex. The cable lines run on Wabash avenue and State street. You can catch a car at any time on either of these streets up town. Will the roads be able to handle all the passenger traffic? That question has been asked thousands of times, and there is only one answer—that is "Yes." At the terminal station alone there are 25 standing tracks for arriving and departing trains, which make facilities for the reception of 100,000 people every hour. The cable lines can handle 80,000, and the elevated road 20,000, not to mention the 20,000 or 40,000 who can be taken care of by the steamship lines, nor the immense number who will come by the Illinois Central. These figures of course apply in the case of an occasional rush, such as is likely to occur on the Fourth of July or on Illinois day. In these emergencies the transportation facilities are equal to the task of accommodating at least 1,000,000 people.

A glimpse of Midway Plaisance. Here we are at Midway plaisance. This is about as good a place to disembark as any, and it is one of the features of the fair besides. The entrance is on Cottage Grove avenue, on which street the cable line runs; Washington park is just beyond. Midway plaisance is nearly a mile in length. As we enter the grounds the first structure that greets our eyes is the Women's building. This is headquarters for the women of the world, and a visit to it will teach us much about the advancement of the sex in this day and age.

Before we go any farther you may as well know that an admission fee entitles you to see everything within the grounds except the Eskimo village and the Cliff Dwellers' pavilion. All this talk you have heard about there being extra charges at every turn is nonsense. All the private exhibits are outside the grounds proper, in Midway plaisance and elsewhere, and it is entirely optional with the visitor to see them or let them alone.

Here we halt and see the children's exhibit, and now we are at the Horticultural building. This is the greatest horticultural display ever gathered together, and from all parts of the world, of course.

This is Choral hall, where some of the greatest musical artists of the world will be heard during the progress of the fair. Passing on, we come to the Transportation building, where we find exhibits showing the perfected facilities of modern travel and the improvements of latter day methods over those of times past.

DIANA ON THE AGRICULTURAL BUILDING. the captive balloon and in close proximity to the Chinese village. The Celestials have a theater here, which we must "take in" some time. This is the Moroccan national exhibit, and here is the panorama of the volcano Kilnaes.

LA RABIDA. Now comes the Mines and Mining building. Here are shown ancient and modern methods of mining, and here are gathered the greatest imaginable variety and wealth of exhibits from all the great mining states and territories, from Alaska, Australia, Africa and all over the earth. This is one of the displays that it takes time to see.

The Electrical Exhibit. And now the electrical exhibit. What a contrast with that of the centennial! After this a short tour about the Administration building, and then for Machinery hall. We cannot nor could not make any sort of a complete inspection of this building if we put in every day here during the fair, but we will take a layman's look about. From here we pass to the stock pavilion. In this vicinity are gathered oil and lumber exhibits, etc.

Passing toward the south end of the grounds, we look at the displays of agricultural implements, windmills, etc., and this brings us to the dairy barn and on to the great stock exhibit. When we have come through that, we return by way of the power house to the southeast corner of the grounds. Here are the forestry, dairy and leather exhibits in succession.

Passing the great Krupp gun exhibit, we come to an Indian school, and beyond, on the point, is the Monasterio de la Rabida, a reproduction of the convent in Spain of that name, in which Columbus once took refuge in time of trouble, and where he is said to have evolved his theories as to the existence of the western world.

Crossing a bridge, we come to the Agricultural building. Here is where farmers will gather and study and discuss new ways and means of making the soil give full returns for their labor. Now let us go over to the Casino, cross to Music hall and find our way into the Manufactures and Liberal Arts building, which is the largest structure of the exposition and contains enough to keep the visitor busy investigating for months and months, and investigating in a very casual way at that. From here we go through the Government building, then to the naval exhibit, and here we are at North pier. It is but a short walk from here, past some of the foreign buildings, to the fisheries exhibit. This is very interesting, of course, and here we see just how the government stocks our fish on streams and lakes and ponds.

The Art Galleries and State Buildings. We will go now to the Art galleries, stopping at the Illinois building on route. This edifice will see lots of visitors on Illinois day. That dome sets off the pile to good advantage, doesn't it? On the way to the Art galleries we pass also the state buildings of Indiana, California, Wisconsin, Colorado, Michigan and Ohio. Our tour of the Art galleries takes a long time, of course. And now we have been through all the main buildings. Now a walk through the north end of the grounds, where all the state buildings are located, and a special visit to the Eskimos and the building of our native state, and we walk south again.

Here, in the long stretch of ground between the gate and Cottage Grove avenue, are gathered miscellaneous exhibits and amusements of various kinds, for seeing and indulging in which one pays fees varying from 10 to 25 cents, and in the cases of the Hagenbeck animal show, the panorama of Kilnaes and the captive balloon more are charged. Seats to see the performances at the animal show all cost from 50 cents to $1. The panorama fee is 50 cents, and the trip in the captive balloon costs the visitor $2.

Well, what have we on this side as we walk toward Cottage Grove avenue? Here on the left we pass the Irish village exhibit, the Hagenbeck animal show, the Dutch settlement (there's more of this on the other side of the plaisance, you see), the natatorium, the panorama of the Bernese Alps and the Turkish village. This is the Moorish palace. There is $1,300,000 in gold coin exhibited in there.

Now we come to the ice railway, and next to the Chinese tea-house, passing by the French crier, the fire and guard station, and two or three minor exhibits, and here we are at the Austrian village. I am more interested, however, in the Dahomeyan village just beyond. These are some of the colored ladies who have had disagreements with our French friends. Along here are the Roman house, the Hungarian orpheum and other things, and these passed we arrive at the nursery exhibit and at the end of Midway plaisance.

Poor Lo and His Cousins. Here on the way back we find Poor Lo and his cousins from India hobnobbing together in adjoining villages, next to
