HOME AGAIN
Chapter 65

Unexpectedly, it was Aunt Maude who met the train.
"My land, but you look expensive," she remarked after a prefatory kiss. "Did Mrs. Gates give you that suit, or did you buy it with your own money?"
"I bought it," Pan answered and wondered why she should resent this remark. Surely one's aunt had a perfect right to ask such questions!
Aunt Maude thought so, at least. She went straight along.
"That's a nice hat—sort of odd, but nice. How much did it cost?"
"I don't know," the girl answered still stifling her irritation.
"Oh, Mrs. Gates gave it to you? Well, it does look like the sort of things she wore."
"She did give it to me, but she never wore it. I can't wear her type of clothes," Pan tried to explain.
"Type of clothes? My land, don't you sound grand. Clothes are clothes, some cost more than others, if you mean type by that, Gladys says you wear a nurse's uniform, like that nurse's rig the nurse wore here last Summer."

Indigestion, Weak Digestion or partial digestion of food, is one of the most serious of present-day complaints—because it is responsible for many serious troubles.
Those who suffer with Indigestion, almost invariably are troubled with Rheumatism, Palpitation of the Heart, Sleeplessness and excessive Nervousness. "Gladys is quite wrong," Pan said calmly, then he regretted the "quite." Somehow Norris City never used "quite." It's distinctions were as hard and sharp as black from white, "quite" implied shades of meaning, with which Gladys was never bothered.
She hastened to ask, "How is Gladys?"
This was enough to divert Aunt Maude.
"Oh, doing fine. We've been making baby clothes. Did you bring anything from the stores in the city?"
Pan was glad she had remembered a package of dainty little objects suitable for a newly born infant.
It was this package, indeed, which started her visit pleasantly. Some few letters had been exchanged. Gladys was consumed with curiosity about her cousin. She did not recognize, in the slim, self-possessed attractively dressed young figure that jumped lightly from the wagon, the impossibly shabby, terrified little creature who had departed six months before.

For the first time, she disliked herself. She felt huge, awkward, cumbersome, out-of-date, out of the world, beside the once-snobbed Pandora. Pan's greeting, indeed, was pleasant—but laced in either affection or gratitude, and somehow Gladys felt she should expect both from her cousin.

Pan ran to her father, here was the magnet, here was her reason for her week-end home. And she greeted Morton, when he drove out a little later, without a single feeling but one of quiet friendliness. They sat in the big farm house "sitting-room" after supper—it was a little too chilly for the porch in the evenings. Pan was pitted with questions—and she was led into telling more and more of her new life, she felt the atmosphere congeal.

Aunt Maude could not understand such a life. And what she could not understand, she could not approve of.
"What does a woman want her own business for anyway?" she asked. "If she's so attractive, she must have plenty of men wanting to marry her. Why does she take one and settle down—then she could look after her son?"
"She is married, she doesn't live with her husband," Gladys inter-rupted her voice showing that any woman who elected to be independent was quite likely very bad indeed.

"Why should she live with him? He came back to New York, and she was so upset she was ill for weeks. How can you disapprove, Gladys? You don't know what he was like—I do. No self-respecting woman would have anything to do with him."
Aunt Maude took a new line.
"Are all these men who come to her house—do they come to see her or you?"
"Her, I suppose," Pan answered.
"Well, Dora," Aunt Maude concluded, using the girl's old nickname. "I think you're not in good company and had better come home. Gladys can help more with the work after the baby's born, and in the winter, they'll live in their own house, Summers on the farm with us."

"I'm sorry," said Pan, knowing guiltily that she wasn't sorry at all. "But I've promised Gloria to sell, she can't get on without me. And we're going to Europe in the Summer."
This was impressive enough! Even Uncle Peter looked up from the paper he was reading. Her own father was delighted, he began talking of all the old villages and towns he had wandered into, told her what to eat so she wouldn't be sea sick, asked for picture post cards while she was away.

Gladys was growing sullen. Dora was having entirely too much of this world's goods. Dora was getting everything—fine clothes, trips to Europe, dances and parties, well, she thought, anyway she hasn't got a husband. And she looked placid again as she glanced over at Morton.

Fiery, Itching Skin Is Quickly Soothed With This Sulphur

Mentho Sulphur, a pleasant cream, will soothe and heal skin that is irritated or broken out with eczema; that is covered with ugly rash or pimples, or is rough or dry. Nothing subdues fiery skin eruptions so quickly says a noted skin specialist.
The mentho sulphur preparation is applied to itching spots and after two or three applications the eczema is gone and the skin is delightfully clear and smooth. Sulphur is so precious as a skin remedy because it destroys the parasites that cause the burning, itching or disfigurement. Mentho Sulphur always heals eczema right up.

A small jar of Mentho Sulphur may be had at any good drug store.
