

Distillers Differ On Postponing Liquor Taxes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Whisky Howard T. Jones of the Distilled Spirits Institute. Jones said he represented the views of 70 per cent of the industry.

But a string of witnesses backed Gilbert in calling for enactment of Eberhart's measure which they said is needed to save American producers.

Gilbert said the eight-year bonding period "is rapidly bringing the United States distilling industry to its knees."

"This law requires distillers to pay a heavy excise tax on whisky they cannot sell," he said.
