ELLEN'S DIARY

Strengthened Faith Found In Things That Are Eternal

Once more the Easter Season is here—come back with its memories of Easter's past, in quiet days, to which we look back kindly. And always about the observance of seasonal customs carried down across the years folks find a strengthened faith in things eternal which transcends all.

We remember how dark the world was that first Good Friday, how tragic when the sinful side of humanity was so many times shown. How extremely sad the procession of crosses. And so sorrowful it all was. . . and is.

Yet we remember, and so gratefully, we of the sisterhood, those women who came at the rising of the sun on the Resurrection Morn bringing their spices to that quiet garden-spot. . . Came, we can appreciate, sorrowfully, and we doubt not, times being what they were, more or less afraid. But out of the kindness of heart, in love and gratitude, to the grave of their own.

Had they, we wonder, talked it over among themselves—those women? The Magdalene, who owed so much to Him, proposing: "Don't you think we should? How can we leave Him there without a sign of our regard? We must go. . . early, yes, while it is still dark. Shall we meet at Mary's door? I'll bring. . . and do you take. . ."

And so the plans were made, even as womenkind make them in this age, out of the fumes of hearts, anxious, willing to do what they can in a time of trouble or sorrow to show their sympathy, attending to details, the little often-overlooked services: a gift for the ill or troubled, flowers for the departed, sympathetic words for the bereaved.

And we fancy a songbird uttered a run of notes as they entered the garden in that first light, as we have so often noted on singing in a rural burial place during a communal service or when we visited or came by that quiet spot. Not a light run of notes but solemn words of a psalm we think: "He healeth the broken in heart, he bindeth up their wounds. . . for He hath prepared His throne in the Heavens. . ."

And the wonder of it there in the garden! "He is not here, for He is risen, as He said."

And down through the years since, there comes the joy and promise of the repeated Easter-morns. All the shadows and suffering past, and for humans and hope beyond the grave. . . And now the new blades, the first flowers rise from the mould to symbolize in another Easter-time this fact once more to mankind.

And we remember that death and life, despair and joy, Calvary and Easter, "Were just three days apart."

Good-night. . .

MARY HAWORTH

Trust Fund Is Advocated In Preference To "Will"

Dear Mary Haworth: In a recent instance you advised a correspondent to make "a fool-proof will" in the event she decides to disinherit her neglectful daughter and bequeath her assets at death to a friendly neighbor couple.

This is the kind of situation that almost certainly produces a contest of the will. To avoid that, and also save taxes at death, it would be wiser for her to create a living trust with a strong bank having trust powers, transfer most of her assets to the trustee now, and make a will in favor of the trustee to cover any odds and ends not in the trust at death.

Of course, the trust should assign all income to her during life, and establish her title to use such principal as she desires.

She can reserve the right to amend or revoke, although that will require her to pay tax on the income from the trust during her life, just as she pays on income now. However, the trust would avoid the hazard of a jury making a different disposition of her estate than she desires.

Most jurists seem to think that parents have a duty to make children beneficiaries of their will, although persons with large experience know there are situations in which children don't deserve it. Obviously your correspondent should employ her own lawyer's help in formalizing her plan.

Dear Mary Haworth: I have been reading your column for years and appreciate your thoughtful sympathetic counsel.

To the mother who is thinking of leaving her money to a lovely neighbor couple, instead of to her ingrate daughter, I wish to offer some additional suggestions.

If she makes the kind neighbors her legatees, they may be subjected to the bitter, frustrating experience of a contested will. To avoid this, the donor may prefer to set up a trust fund to their account, during her lifetime.

Another possibility, having the same aim, is for the mother to deposit a substantial amount of money with some reputable institution (say, a university or charity organization) and specify annuities to be paid to the neighbor couple, or their children, for their lifetime.

This type of arrangement should protect the beneficiaries against any stigma that might arise from a contested will. A lawyer who specializes in estate planning undoubtedly could offer additional ideas in the same vein.

Dear E.B.: As I said before, this mother has earned the right to dispose of her estate as she sees fit, and if she favors

A song of sometime through the rain,
Of spring across the snow;
A balm to heal the hurts of pain.
A peace surpassing woe.
Lift up your heads, ye sorrowing ones.
And be ye glad of heart.
For Calvary and Easter Day
Were just three days apart!
With shudder of despair and loss
The world's deep heart is wrung.
As lifted high upon His Cross
The Lord of Glory hung—
When rocks were rent a mid ghostly forms
Stole forth in street and mart;
But Calvary and Easter Day,
Earth's saddest day and glad-dest day,
Were just three days apart.

Your suggestions about the positive value of a trust fund, in protecting the testator's purpose, while saving on taxes, may encourage her to seek specialist counsel from a lawyer or trust officer at her bank. This is the course I recommend, inasmuch as detailed discussion should help her decide what she wants to do.

Dear Mary Haworth: I can't resist contradicting your views regarding the bachelor balked by his dream girl co-worker.

Here is an earnest young man seriously attentive to a girl who seems coldly opportunistic, to the extent that she refuses even to date a man whose current status is below her standard for a mate.

She sounds calculating and confused, while he, in contrast, seems considerate, respectful and kind—virtues by no means commonplace.

You ensure him for checking into her past history and finding fault with her social ambition. It doesn't signify, necessarily, that he is base or sneaky; a man has to be terribly interested in a girl to take that trouble.

Your concluding hope, that the girl may stand firm in her refusal to date him, seems uncalled-for and unkind—indicative of antagonism on your part towards men: a poor psychological basis for lovers' advising.

Dear G.S.: We turned thumbs down on this bachelor's suit, because he simply and solely wanted a date, for curiosity's sake, with this girl—who consistently told him, from the first, that she is already interested in someone else, and going steady.

Mary Haworth counsels through her column, not by mail or personal interview. Write her in care of The Guardian.
