

THE DAILY EXAMINER. SEPTEMBER 6, 1881.

The Late Dr. Lachlin Taylor.

The Rev. Dr. Lachlin Taylor, whose lamented death we referred to last evening, deserves more than a passing notice from us. He was, in many respects, an extraordinary man. He was born in Scotland, in the year 1817. He was trained under Presbyterian influences, but in early manhood connected himself with the Wesleyan Methodists of Upper Canada, to which place his parents had emigrated when he was but a lad. But though strongly attached to the Church of his choice, he entertained the warmest affection for the Church of his parents, and throughout his whole life was broad, and liberal in his religious sympathies. He entered the Ministry of the Methodist Church in the year 1839, and from that time till 1850 he performed the work of an itinerant, being sent to several of the more important circuits of the Conference, including Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal. In 1850 he became a supernumerary for one year, and then, by permission of his Conference, accepted the office of agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society for Upper Canada, which office he held until 1865. He then became Missionary Secretary of the Canada Wesleyan Conference, with his headquarters at Toronto. This position he held for eight years, discharging the duties of the same with credit to the connexion and much pleasure to himself. Since then he has held various offices of trust and responsibility in the church, including that of delegate of the Conference, and he has also been in the Civil Service of the Dominion Government, having acted as Emigration Agent for three years, in Great Britain, during the Mackenzie Administration.

In the midst of these onerous and important duties in Church and State, he found time to travel very extensively. He more than once visited British Columbia, and in the year 1863, he and his friend E. E. Bowie now of this city, cut down the logs, and erected the second Methodist Church beyond the Rocky Mountains on British territory. He visited nearly every state in the neighboring Republic. He crossed the Atlantic eleven times, and visited Egypt, Syria, and the Holy Land. He had a passion for travelling, and a faculty for gathering information which few men possess, and with a remarkable facility for imparting that information, both on the public platform and in social conversation. It was his delight to relate to attentive listeners what he had seen in the lands he had visited, and the distinguished personages he had met in his travels, and with pardonable pride, he would tell that he had stood before kings, and dined with princes, and conversed with the most notable people of the age.

His death cannot but be regarded as a public loss. His sermons delivered in this city, during several visits to the Island, were master pieces of pulpit eloquence, and his lectures on his travels in the East rank with the best lectures delivered by the first lecturers of the day.

It seems sad that one so gifted and so honored, should be cut off in the midst of his usefulness; but the ways of Divine Providence are inscrutable. But, though dead, he yet speaks, and Lachlin Taylor will long be remembered by the thousands in many lands who enjoyed his friendship and were charmed by his eloquence.

Misrepresentation Corrected.

We will briefly notice the Patriot's perversion of our remarks on the libel suit of Mr. Lawson before Presbytery and Synod's Commission. The Patriot insists that Mr. Stewart's "biting enemies" were allowed to bring what charges they pleased against him before the Synod's Commission. This is grossly untrue. For, first, the Synod's Commission was simply a Review Court, and could allow nothing to come before it that had not appeared before the Presbytery. Then, Mr. Stewart was allowed unbounded privileges in that Court. If he did not answer objections raised, the fault was not the Presbytery's. The Presbytery recorded all he did, every point he made, and faithfully transmitted the result of his pleadings to the Commission. So that virtually Mr. Stewart was heard before the Commission.

But further, Mr. Lawson was only allowed to follow where the Presbytery led the way. Bounds and metres were prescribed in the libel served by Presbytery on Mr. Lawson, inasmuch of which he was rigorously held, both before Presbytery and Commission. If the Commission wronged Mr. Stewart in not hearing him, why did not the Presbytery appeal to General Assembly, — a course which undoubtedly they would have adopted, had they viewed the matter as the Patriot does. The Patriot virtually brings a double charge against the Presbytery: first, for not being able to answer Mr. Lawson, and then, having failed in that, failed further in not appealing to Assembly. Doubtless the Presbytery felt that Mr. Stewart was granted a privilege in violation of ecclesiastical procedure: hence their inaction. This violation our wise and self-willed contemporary would now insist upon as a right.

We repeat what we have said: When the Presbytery determined to prosecute Mr. Lawson by libel on the ground of a fama clamosa, this course necessarily and absolutely excluded Mr. Stewart's appearance before its bar, either virtually or technically.

The following extract from the Rules and Forms of Procedure in such a case settles this part of our contention. When the Presbytery resolves to libel a minister, "It is expedient that it should nominate one or more of its members as a committee to prepare the libel, and afterwards to act as public prosecutors and conduct the examinations and other proceedings." Will our wise contemporary show us the rule authorizing the Presbytery to give Mr. Stewart, or any one else not a member of the court, a status enabling him to "conduct the examinations and other proceedings?"

The Patriot says: "He (THE EXAMINER) knows that Mr. Stewart did give the Directors of the Summerside Bank permission to produce the books containing the accounts of Pidgeon & Stewart, and that the permission was telegraphed to the Directors of the Bank by the Clerk of Presbytery." This is all true; but not all the truth. The Directors of the Summerside Bank would not accept Mr. Stewart's permission tendered in this manner, as they did not consider it legally safe to do so. They would accept of nothing else but Mr. Stewart's permission in Mr. Stewart's own handwriting. And because this, so far as we know, was never done, the books of the Summerside Bank are closed to inspection.

Such are the simple facts; we leave them to speak for themselves. The object of Mr. Lawson's stipulation was to reach the evidence in the Summerside Bank. This the Presbytery and Mr. Stewart must have felt when the latter was admitted within the precincts of that court. That object not having been realized, Mr. Lawson has just reason to complain of the violation of his compact before the Presbytery with Mr. Stewart. This view of the case is what the Patriot calls "ungenerous!"

The effort the Patriot makes to involve us in self-contradiction when we say that Mr. Stewart could not be a party constitutionally at the bar of Presbytery, and yet was found acting there as prosecutor, is so simple and original that we pass it by without further notice.

Licensing Board.

"THE LICENSING BOARD" were elected to-day. Their election was necessary in case the Scott Act should at any time within the year cease to be the law, and a recurrence to licenses should be required. No interest was taken in the election. The only candidates in the field were Messrs. John Kelly, S. W. Crabbe and James Curtis; they were, of course, elected.

Panama Canal.

It seems probable that M. De Lesseps Canal Scheme will collapse. Yellow fever has compelled the suspension of work on four sections; and it is said that no one can safely venture near who is unaccustomed to tropical life.

H. M. S. NORTHAMPTON.

Double S. Iron Armor-plated Ship. 7223 TONS—6070 H. P.—SHIP'S COMPANY, 650 MEN—BEARING THE FLAG OF VICE-ADMIRAL SIR F. LEOPOLD MCLINTOCK, K.T., F. R. S., D. C. L., ETC., COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF THE NORTH AMERICAN AND WEST INDIAN STATION.

The characteristic feature of this noble ship, now lying in our harbor, is the disposition of the armour. The central part (about 180 feet of her length) is armoured with nine-inch plates tapering to seven inches at the after end, up to a shot proof deck, four feet out of water. The ends are without side armour, but have an underwater armoured deck, three inches thick, protecting everything that is vital. There is a high battery, with twelve heavy guns. An armoured bulk-head at each end of battery (forward nine inch plates and aft 8-inch plates) gives protection against end-on fire. This bulk-head is continued on the broadside with eight inch plates, so as to protect the bow and stern guns from broadside fire also. The intermediate guns are unprotected by armour; but are separated from each other by splinter screens or traverses. When the ship is prepared for action, the thin side is so constructed as to minimize the chance of splinters doing harm to the men. The lower deck, is principally for the ship's company to live on, the after end being occupied by the officers; the remainder of the deck for poor Jack and Joe the marine, some sewing, some dancing and in other amusing ways, passing their leisure hours. This deck is armoured forward with eight inch armour plates, and six inch armoured plate aft to protect the passage of ammunition when the ship is end on, and to prevent the ship from being raked between decks by shell.

The fore and aft unarmoured ends of the ship are sixty feet and forty feet long respectively. They may be regarded as being built upon the proper ship. The armoured deck, terminating in the ram at the fore end and covering the steering gear at the after end, is the top of the armoured ship outside the armour belt; and if shot or shell traversing these unarmoured parts under water, should tear away the side plating, it is so constructed that it would rip off from the armoured deck without disturbing the connexion between this deck and the plating of the bottom beneath it.

The ship is, of course, partly supported in the water by the displacement of the bulk of enclosed space lying above the armoured deck and below the water-line. Any portion of this space placed in free communication with the sea by shot holes under water, will be so much lost buoyancy. To prevent this loss, the space has been filled up as far as possible by water excluding doors—air by water tanks already filled with water, and therefore, under unalterable buoyant conditions.

This formidable ship has upon her upper deck a "Conning tower" thickly armoured with nine inch armour plates, besides eighteen inches of Teopacking on three sides, the after side being protected from rills shot by a large rope matting. In this case the commanding officer has sole control of his ship, there being a small wheel about 2 feet in diameter, which a child can turn with perfect ease, which steers the ship by steam and can run her in her own length, by braking with an engine, and going ahead with the other, they both working independently. This can be done at any moment, there being voice tubes from the "conning tower" to engine room, and to every other important part of the ship. There is also in the "conning tower" an electric battery, so that the commanding officer can fire any single gun, or all together, as circumstances require, by electricity.

On the same deck are six port M. L. R. guns, and six Nordenfjeld guns, having in each four barrels. There are also two Gatling guns each ten barrels which are placed in her tops. Two men stationed at a high gun fire as rapidly as 200 men with the Martini-Henri rifles. These guns which would be aided by the two electric lights, one being placed forward and the other aft, on the upper deck would be able to repel any torpedo attack, which is generally made when covered by the darkness of night.

Another thing on this deck, which must not be passed without notice, is the system, which can be heard at a distance varying from twenty to thirty miles, and can be used for signal purposes. The Northampton is supplied with twelve Whitehead Fish Torpedoes, which are discharged from four ports on the lower deck—two on each side by the most modern appliances, sending them at the rate of 20 knots an hour. She is also supplied with telephones, by which communication can be carried on to any part of the ship. Taken for all in all she is a masterpiece of mechanism. Everything, like furnished brass, is scrupulously bright. It would be well worth any one's time to visit this splendid ship. All are courteously received, shown round, and everything is explained, giving a good idea of the progressive strides our Mother Country is making in science and manufactures, as well as of the invulnerable ships of war she has to protect our rights—ships which are manned by such smart, well-disciplined and robust men that their equals can be found in no other navy in the world.

A REPORT from St. Pier, N. B., says a large number of convicts had fully arranged to kill the Governor, Chief Justice, and all the other officials, so as the arrest, cut off the water supply burn the place, and escape on two schooners which they were to capture. The plot was discovered, and a large number of convicts were captured on the evening of the 4th inst. It was to have been carried out about twenty conspirators have been sentenced to be shot.—Herald.

Personal.

It may be interesting to know that Lieut. Governor Haviland and Admiral McClintock were old schoolfellows, having attended the same College some forty years ago. It is said that they both left College on the same day. Mr. JOHN KOUCHAN, son of Councillor Kouchan, of this city, who recently passed a very creditable examination for master at Mr. Miller's Nautical School here, left this morning for Boston, to take command of a barque belonging to Mr. McWilliams, of West Cape. Capt. Kouchan, who is probably the youngest shipmaster in the Province, will sail from Boston for Buenos Ayres.

MESSRS. THOMAS CAMPBELL, John McPhee, and A. McDonald, of Charlottetown, were registered at the "Halifax Hotel" in Halifax, on Saturday.

It is believed that Sir Charles Gavan Duffy will be asked to re-enter political life, and that in case of a vacancy occurring in a popular county constituency in Ireland which is at present anticipated, he will be requested to become a candidate.

THE other day a London Times correspondent said the ladies of Canada were a happy man between English shyness and American freedom. And now the Volunteer Service Gazette says of the Canadian "boys" in the artillery contest at Shoeburyness, "They made themselves thoroughly popular at once by their frank and friendly manners." Don't let us get too proud.

SIR HECTOR LANGEVIN was entertained the other evening by a number of his Toronto friends at the Restaurant Francais. Sir Hector, in the course of his remarks, made the very satisfactory intimation that the surplus for the fiscal year just closed would exceed four millions of dollars.

QUEEN VICTORIA, at Osborne, on the 17th of August presented to six soldiers who fought in the late Afghan campaign medals for distinguished conduct in the field. Five of the men belong to the late 66th Regiment, which was nearly annihilated at Malwand. The Queen, who was accompanied by several members of the royal family, pinned each man's medal to his breast.
