CHAPTER XXVI.

"Ah, poor kinwoman!" said Brenda. "But believe you, father, in the high powers which she claims—in the mysterious vision of the dwarf—in the—"

She was interrupted in these questions by Magnus, to whom they were obviously displeasing.

"I believe Brenda," he said, "according to the belief of my forefathers—I pretend not to be a wiser man than they were in their time—and they all believed that, in cases of great worldly distress, Providence opened the eyes of the mind, and afforded the sufferers a vision of futurity. It was but a trimming of the boat, with reverence,—here he touched his hat reverentially;—and after all the shifting of ballast, poor Norna is as heavily loaded in the bows as ever was an Orkneyman's yawl at the dog-fishing—she has more than affliction enough on board to balance whatever gifts she may have had in the midst of her calamity. They are as painful to her, poor soul, as a crown of thorns would be to her brows though it were the badge of the empire of Denmark. And do not you, Brenda, seek to be wiser than your fathers. Your sister Minna before she was so ill, had as much reverence for whatever was produced in Norse, as if it had been in the Pope's bull, which is all written in Latin."

"Poor Norna!" replied Brenda; "and her child—was it never recovered?"

"What do I know of her child?" said the Udalder, more gruffly than before, "except that she was very ill, both before and after the birth, though we kept her as merry as we could with pipe and harp, and so forth;—the child had come before its time into this bustling world, so it is likely it has been long dead.—But you know nothing of all these matters, Brenda; so get along for a foolish girl, and ask no more questions about what it does not become you to inquire into."

So saying, the Udalder gave his sturdy little palfrey the spur, and cantering forward over rough and smooth, while the pony's accuracy and firmness of step put all difficulties of the path at secure defiance, he placed himself soon by the side of the melancholy Minna, and permitted her sister to have no farther share in his conversation than as it was addressed to them jointly. She could but comfort herself with the hope, that, as Minna's disease appeared to have its seat in the imagination, the remedies recommended by Norna might have some chance of being effectual, since, in all probability, they would be addressed to the same faculty.

Their way had hitherto held chiefly over moss and moor, varied occasionally by the necessity of making a circuit around the heads of those long lagoons, called voes, which run up into and indent the country in such a manner, that, though the Mainland of Zetland may be thirty miles or more in length, there is, perhaps, no part of it which is more than three miles distant from the salt water. But they had now approached the northern western extremity of the isle, and travelled along the top of an immense ridge of rocks, which had for ages withstood the rage of the Northern Ocean, and of all the winds by which it is buffeted.

At length Magnus exclaimed to his daughters: "There is Norna's dwelling! Look up, Minna, my love; for if this does not make you laugh nothing will. Saw you ever anything but an osprey that would have made such a nest for herself as that is? By my namesake's bones, there is not the like of it that living thing ever dwelt in, (having no wings and the use of reason), unless it chance to be the Prawa-Stack off Papa, where the King's daughter of Norway was shut up to keep her from her lovers—and all to little purpose, if the tale is true; for, maidens, I would have you to wot that it is hard to keep flax from the loom."

CHAPTER XXVII.

Thrice from the cavern's darkness wondrous
Her groaning voice arose;
And come, my daughter, fearless come,
And fearless tell thy woes!

MEIKLE.

The dwelling of Norna, though none but a native of Zetland, familiar, during the whole life, with every variety of rock-severity, could have seen any thing ludicrous in this situation, was not unaptly compared by Magnus Troil, to the cry of the osprey, or sea eagle. It was very small, and had been fabricated out of one of those dens which are called Burghs and Pict-houses in Zetland, and Duns on the mainland of Scotland and the Hebrides and which seem to be the first effort at architecture—the connecting link betwixt a fox's hole in a cairn of loose stones, and an attempt to construct a human habitation of the same materials, without the use of lime or cement of any kind,—without any timber, so far as can be seen from their remains,—without any knowledge of the arch or of the stair. Such as they are, however, the numerous remains of these dwellings, for there is one found on every headland, islet, or point of vantage, which could afford the inhabitants additional means of defence, tend to prove that the remote people by whom these remote Burghs were constructed, were constructed, were a numerous race, and that the islands had then a much greater population, than, from other circumstances, we might have been led to anticipate.

The Burgh of which we at present speak, had been altered and repaired at a later period, probably by some petty despot, or sea-rover, who, tempted by the security of the situation, which occupied the whole of a projecting point of rock and was divided from the mainland by a rent or chasm of some depth, had built some additions to it in the rudest style of Gothic defensive architecture;—had plastered the inside with lime and clay and broken out windows for the admission of light and air; and, finally, by roofing it over, and dividing it into stories, by means of beams of wreck-wood, had converted the whole into a tower, resembling a pyramidal dovecot, formed by a double wall, still containing within its thickness that set of circular galleries, or eccentric rings, which is proper to all the forts of this primitive construction, and which seem to have constituted the only shelter which they were originally qualified to afford to their shivering inhabitants.

Cablegram From the Pope.

TO HIS GRACE ARCHBISHOP O'BRIEN—LONGINGLY BESTOWING UPON HIS GRACE AND THE FAITHFUL, THE APOSTOLIC BENEDICTION.

The following is a translation of an address of the Archbishop and Bishops of the Maritime Provinces, sent to the Pope, on the occasion of his Golden Jubilee:

MOST HOLY FATHER:—The Archbishop and Bishops of the ecclesiastical Province of Halifax, united among themselves by the bond of faith and fraternal love, and mindful of their devotion towards the Holy See, especially in this most joyful time when the whole Catholic world is celebrating your Jubilee, hasten to offer you our congratulations and best wishes.

Together with Your Holiness we give joyful thanks to God for your preservation to the fiftieth year of your priesthood, and we ardently pray that you may be spared for many long years to give admonition replete with lofty wisdom both to the Church and to the nations.

We who live in the midst of controversies that spring from false principles, or are upheld by unsound doctrines, well know the benefit conferred by you, Most Holy Father, on useful and accurate scholarship by your encyclical letters in which it is clearly shown that all sound human knowledge can be amicably reconciled with the dogmas of faith.

"From Sin shall go forth a law," spake of old the prophet, "and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem;" which prophecy is no less perfectly fulfilled now of Rome than formerly of Jerusalem, you enunciating the law to be observed by nations in civil affairs, and the true doctrine to be held everywhere by the people.

This is, indeed, a cause of jubilee to us. Most Holy Father, and a reason for rejoicing at the triumphs gained; but sorrow and grief cast their shadows on our joy when we think of you the prisoner of a hostile power,—and patrimony of the church despoiled,—the most sacred rights of your civil independence attacked by force and fraud, and shamefully trampled under foot.

Against these injuries done to the whole church we raise our voices, and we unhesitatingly assert that the civil principality of the Roman pontiffs should be restored to the successor of St. Peter, though the efforts of the Catholic world. May God grant that this year of jubilee may be written in the annals of the church as the year of the restoration of the rights of the Holy See.

In the meantime, Most Holy Father, whilst we offer our congratulations, we beseech the Author of Life that he may lead you by the hand safe and unshaken amid the changes of the world, to a ripe age.

+ C. O'BRIEN, Archbishop of Halifax.
+ JOHN SWEENEY, Bishop of St. John.
+ PETER MCINTYRE, Bishop of Ch'town.
+ JAMES ROGERS, Bishop of Chatham.
+ JOHN CAMERON, Bishop of Antigonish.

A CABLEGRAM FROM THE POPE.

In answer to a cablegram conveying the best wishes and congratulations of the Archbishop, Clergy and Laity of the Diocese of Halifax, sent directly to the Holy Father by the Archbishop on the occasion of his Jubilee, the following answer was received:—

To ARCHBISHOP O'BRIEN, Halifax.

The good wishes of Your Grace, the clergy and the people were most pleasing to the Holy Father, and he lovingly bestows on you and on all the faithful the Apostolic Benediction.

(Signed) CARDINAL RAMOLLA.

Pope Leo's Reply to Queen Victoria.

This is the full text of the reply made by the Pope when the Duke of Norfolk, the Queen's special envoy, presented Queen Victoria's autograph letter acknowledging the jubilee gift sent to her by His Holiness, and also carried out her instructions verbally to congratulate him on his own approaching jubilee:

"It was with pleasure that we sent our special representative to London six months ago, charged to offer in our name to Her Majesty the Queen of England our congratulations on the 50th anniversary of her glorious accession to the throne. Our joy is not less in receiving to-day from Your Grace the congratulations and the compliments of the Queen, your Sovereign, on the occasion of your priestly jubilee. We accept Her Majesty's message with gratitude, and thank her for the choice which she has made of your illustrious person, so dear to us, in order to convey that message to us.

"We would further, on this specially propitious day, publicly testify our great satisfaction with the liberty which the Catholic religion enjoys throughout the vast British empire, and which permits that religion to prosper more and more. This happy result—we love to acknowledge it—is due to the profound wisdom of her majesty and to the enlightened spirit of her government.

"Will your grace be good enough to convey our sentiment to Her Majesty the Queen, whose glory and prosperity we most ardently hope for?"

The Moncton Times reports that there has been collected in Scott Act fines since the first December, 1850, which amount has been handed over to the Receiver of Taxes for the use of the temperance committee in accordance with the agreement entered into. It is said there has been collected altogether since the arrangements with the temperance committee about $1200, the greater part of which has been handed over to the committee and paid out in costs.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces natural quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain; and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhoea, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and take no other kind.
