British Reaction Is Cold To French Nuclear Offer

LONDON (Reuters)—British diplomatic sources have reacted coldly to a French statement interpreted as an offer to Britain to join a European nuclear force.

The apparent offer was made Monday in a short single sentence of a speech given by Michel Habib-Delonele, French secretary of state for foreign affairs, to the council of Europe in Strasbourg, France.

Sources here said the government had not received any official proposals on the matter and foreign office officials declined comment on the Habib-Delonele remarks.

Speaking to the 17-member council, Habib-Delonele underlined that France intended to pursue its nuclear effort so long as the United States and the Soviet Union had not definitely committed themselves to a general and controlled disarmament.

"If Britain sees her future inside a European community, she can find in this field the chance of a positive contribution, taking into account the choice such a decision implies," he then said.

The sources here noted that in a speech given last year Deputy Foreign Minister Edward Heath said Britain was quite willing to accept the fact that a European point of view on defence would emerge.

MUST RELATE VIEWS

But he emphasized this European view should be directly related to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The sources said after the meeting between President Kennedy and Prime Minister Macmillan at Nassau last December and the meeting later in Ottawa of the NATO ministerial council, that Britain expressed the hope France would contribute to the organization a nuclear force for the Atlantic alliance.

This, the British officials felt, would assist the development of large European participation in the arrangements for the defence the West which remained the British government's general objective.

In Strasbourg, both Conservative and Labor party members attending the assembly agreed that a new element could be read into Habib Delonele's offer.

Some saw it as an overture to Britain to abandon its special relationship with the United States and throw in its lot with Europe.

Others went farther and wondered if the offer was made on France's apprehensions that the cost of developing a national nuclear deterrent by itself would prove too great.

Judge Backs Police Action In Place des Arts Outbreak

MONTREAL (CP) — Judge Henri Monty in municipal court here expressed approval of police action in quelling a Separatist-led demonstration at the opening of Montreal's Place des Arts Saturday.

Replying to a lawyer representing one of 15 persons arraigned on charges growing out of the disturbance, Judge Monty said:

"Who knows what would have happened if police had not been present? I am not concerned here with politics but with the application of the law.

"However, I must say that no movement will achieve its aims by actions such as this.

"If police hadn't broken up the demonstration who knows where it might have stopped. It could have led to grave disorders."

Present in court was Dr. Marcel Chaput, leader of the Quebec Republican party. He sat expressionless in the spectators' section.

Nineteen persons were arrested but only 15 were formally charged. Of the 15, 11 pleaded not guilty and their trials were set for Sept. 30, except for one case which is to be heard Oct. 4.

Two pleaded guilty to charges of disturbing the peace and two others pleaded guilty to charges of obstruction.

Fines ranged from $25 and costs to $50 and costs.

Of the 11 who entered not guilty pleas, one was charged with having an offensive weapon—a duelling rapier—and another with assaulting a policeman as well as disturbing the peace.

Seven were charged with disturbing the peace and the remaining two were charged with obstruction.

Ben Bella Opposes Bomb Test

ALGIERS (AP) — President Ahmed Ben Bella has threatened to step up Algeria's socialization of private enterprise if France explodes another nuclear test device in the Algerian Sahara.

Ben Bella said such a blast "would just hasten our socialization program."

"We would take over their means of exploding more bombs. ."

Ben Bella made his remarks in an address to the Communist - dominated International Organization of Journalists. The Prague-based group — including Alexei Adzubei, son-in-law of Soviet Premier Khrushchev —arrived aboard the Soviet ship Litva on a conference cruise.

Russian Poet Hits Chinese In Comeback

MOSCOW (Reuters) — Poet Yevgeni Yevtushenko, severely criticized in a Russian cultural crackdown early this year, has come back into print with a poem referring to him self and indirectly attacking the Chinese Communists.

The poem, Again at Zima Station, was published in the youth magazine Yunost. It described his return to Zima Station, his Siberian home village, made famous in one of his early major poems seven years ago.

The poem, dated last month, indirectly refers to party attacks on Yevtushenko, which reached their height last spring when his "precocious autobiography" was published in the French magazine l'Express after he made a West European tour.

"I was returning after wanderings, covered with the dust of England and France, and the dust of rumors about myself, and—I will be frank—was not riding high," it read.

In an indirect rejection of charges of betraying his homeland, Yevtushenko writes: "I vow to guard you, fatherland, against wars, against all adversities, against anyone's evilly covetous eyes. . ."

His attack on Chinese views came as he described a war widow in the village and declared: "And you, who with ultra-left phrase and heads unsober want to start a fire, do not nourish yourselves from the clouds, try to convince a widow and mother of your ideas. . . You do not hear that sigh audible across the whole planet 'On that there should be no war."

Opening lead—king of clubs.

The declarer who plays percentages is sure to do well in the long run. Though he does not see the opponents' cards and therefore must grope blindly on many hands, he will still come out on top in most deals if he follows the law of probabilities and puts to use any information he obtains from the bidding or play.

Take this hand. West leads a club and South cannot tell at this point how he will eventually fare. The result depends largely on how the adverse cards are divided. He must lose a spade if West has the king, and he may or may not lose a trump trick, depending on the luck of the deal.

The first thing he should do after winning the club is take a spade finesse. This is no better than leading a trump first, because he does not yet know the best way of handling the trumps.

In the actual hand the spade finesse succeeds and South now makes sure of the contract by entering dummy with a heart to lead a low trump.

If East follows low, South finesses the eight to be certain he does not lose more than one trump trick. Of course, if East produces the jack or king on the trump lead, South takes the ace and returns a trump.

The only other possibility is that East shows out on the trump lead, in which case declarer wins with the ace and plays another trump towards the queen.

If the spade finesse had lost, South would then have been in the position where he could not afford to lose a trump trick. His best bet in such case would have been to cash the ace of diamonds as soon as he was on lead and hope that one opponent or the other was dealt the singleton king.

How to handle the trumps most effectively cannot be properly determined until after the spade finesse is taken. Declarer tackles spades before diamonds so that he will know whether to invoke a trump safety play.
