

Why Does Oily Hair Often Have An Unpleasant Smell?

Don't Let Neglect Make You Pay This Penalty

Your hair is a "dust-catcher"—and the oilier your hair is, the more dust, grime and smoke it collects from the air. These combine with perspiration, dried skin particles or dandruff to coat your scalp with a tight, waxy accumulation that makes it unclean and unhealthy.

Hair experts recommend plenty of scalp massage and the most thorough kind of washing for this type of hair. Yes, your hair needs washing at least once a week with a shampoo that actually dissolves and washes away all dirt and dandruff.

Fitch Dandruff Remover Shampoo is the only shampoo guaranteed to remove dandruff. And Fitch's creamy, stimulating lather works right down into the thousands of tiny hair openings in your scalp, so they are antiseptically clean and

BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

HARD TO BE DIFFERENT
If you differ it is clear you will be considered queer. —Winsome Bluebird.

Mr. and Mrs. Winsome Bluebird were quite upset. It wasn't because they had five children instead of the usual four, an extra mouth to feed. That didn't bother them. No, sir, it wasn't that at all. It was because one of them was white instead of blue. Every feather of his coat from the smallest to the largest was pure white, and he had pink eyes. It worried both father and mother but it worried mother most. Of course, Mothers usually do more worrying than fathers do.

"That won't hurt him any," declared Winsome.

Any one who is all white when supposed to be of other colors is called an albino. So the white young Bluebird was an albino, and they called him Allie. He and his four brothers and sisters were out in the Great World, out in the warm spring sunshine for the first time when young birds leave the nest, usual and all on account of their young son in the white coat. You see he drew too much attention. All the feathered folk in the Old Orchard gathered around to stare at him and talk about him, for a pure white coat in the Old Orchard was really something to talk about. And how they did talk! Old Orchard folk are just like other folk.

Mrs. Winsome shook her head sadly. "Going out in the Great World and living safely is hard enough for any young bird, but it is going to be extra hard for poor little fellow," declared Mrs. Winsome.

"Because he is different?" asked Winsome.

"No," replied Mrs. Winsome. "Because he looks different. He isn't really any different from his brothers and sisters. He is just as much a Bluebird as any of the others. Haven't you noticed how they won't have anything to do with him? They treat him as if he doesn't belong to the family at all."

"I've noticed that," agreed Winsome.

"Wherever he goes those who see him follow him just to stare at him the way the neighbors are doing now," Mrs. Winsome went on.

"That won't hurt him any," declared Winsome. "If he doesn't like it he can keep out of sight."

Winsome looked at his son in the white coat. It wasn't going to be easy to hide with a coat like that. No, sir, it wasn't. Instead it was going to be hard, very hard indeed. That white coat could be seen from long distances and there would be sharp eyes and many of them, sharp eyes and many of them, hungry eyes of swift-winged hungry young Bluebirds. Growing up safely was hard enough for any young bird. It would be very, very much harder for one who would be so easily seen. Winsome was suddenly sorry for his young son.

So it was that his mother paid special attention to him, feeding him first, making sure that he had all the food he needed, flying to his aid as they sometimes did, and doing her best to teach him the things he must learn fast if he was to live. His brothers and sisters kept together more or less as they learned to use their wings, but they wouldn't have him with them any more than they could help. He was what is called an outcast, one who is not wanted.

At first he didn't know what to make of this and he was troubled. But he soon got over this, and because mother fed him so well and took such good care of him he grew fast. Because he was smart he learned fast. He was quick to learn to find his own food. Because he was bothered by the other birds he soon learned to try to keep out of sight when they were about. It was hard to be different, it often is.

A COMMON ERROR
The trump situation in today's deal is relatively common; yet most average players make the same error that was made by declarer, sacrificing an honor to no good purpose.

South dealer. Neither side vulnerable

The bidding:

3 Pass 4 Pass

North's two-over-one diamond response was sketchy; one trump would be more in accord with expert bidding practice. However, the four-spade contract would have been reached (and properly so) in any case on South's justified jump-lead of his suit.

West opened the club ace and, seeing no attractive shift, continued with the suit. South, won, went to the spade ace, returned to his hand with a diamond, and then laid down the jack of trumps. West won and exited with still another club. Declarer ruffed and, trying for a break in the trump suit, led another round of spades. East, however, had two sure tricks in his queen-nine, and so the contract was defeated. South having had to concede three trumps and one club.

The error made by South in this deal was at the fifth trick, when he led the spade jack from his own hand. He had originally lacked six trumps, including the king, queen, nine eight. The probable division of any six cards is not 3-3—a 4-2 break is much more likely—and in taking out the trumps, just as in establishing a side suit, these figures must be borne in mind! South's second lead of trumps (after cashing dummy's ace) should have been a low card! If, by chance, the missing trumps had been divided 3-3, this plan would work out as well as the lead of a high trump; and if the more probable 4-2 break held true, there was a good chance that South could knock out a trump honour by leading a low card, thus reserving his jack-ten for the next "knockout" play in the suit.

but this time Winsome and Mrs. Winsome were more anxious than
