

Odds and Ends.

Men's behaviour should be like their apparel,—not too straight or point device, but free for exercise or motion.—Byron.

Whose turn may it be to-morrow? What weak heart, confident before trial, may not succumb under temptation invincible?—Thackeray.

Sorrow is knowledge; they that know the most mourn the deepest o'er the fatal truth; the tree of knowledge is not the tree of life.—Byron.

"And does that please you, Mrs. Brown, that your husband calls you a Xantippe in public?" "Oh, I don't grudge him the little pleasure of trying to make the world believe that he is a Socrates."

A Trifle Odd.—"Yes," said old Aunt Wisdom, "I cut out every good thing I see in the papers, but what puzzles me is that the best articles end by mentioning some cure. One of the new literary fads, I suppose.

The test of a man's real ability comes when an emergency arises which makes a hasty call on his good judgment and discretion. The man who retains his presence of mind, maintains his equanimity and exercises sound discretion at such critical junctures, is to be relied on and will be put to the front."

"What's the attraction on the shady side of the street this cold and dreary morning?" asked one merchant of another. "Nearly all the travel appears to be on that side." "Why, the foundation of a house has given way, and the building threatens to fall and bury a score of pedestrians in the ruins. That's the only new attraction."

Swell (at door of commercial hotel to Boots).—Who are those respectfully dressed light-porter men with parcels going in and out? Boots—"Them, sir, is commercial gentlemen." Swell—"Dead, dead! What may I ask, are their peculiarities?" Boots—"Well, sir, they never leave the hotel without paying their bills, and they allus remembers the Boots."

Theory and Practice.—Doctor (to brother physician).—"Yes, gentlemen, the sovereign remedy for all ills is fresh air and plenty of it. People don't let enough air into their houses. Well, I must hurry; I'm on an errand." Brother physician—"Going far?" "No, only down to the hardware store to get half a mile of weather stripping."

According to an interview printed in the New York World, Tolstoi thinks it would be a good thing if every author would pigeon-hole his manuscripts and publish nothing during his life. "Then," said he, "there would be less printed matter in the world, and people would find time for reading what was really good." No, author, he argued, ought to receive any compensation for his work either in money or fame. His reward should be the satisfaction of having done, or having tried to do, something for the improvement of his fellow-men.

Of the late Earl of Rosslyn, a Scottish contemporary observes: "A kindly and serviceable man, he was extremely popular with his friends. He was a capital judge of a horse, and of a chef; more than once, we believe, he preached a sound and sensible sermon. He also wrote verse." His vers de societe are what he will be remembered by. His epigram on Greville's "Memoirs" will not soon be forgotten. It begins:—

For fifty years he listened at the door, He heard some secrets and invented more.
