Remember Zale-Graziano

ROCKY GRAZIANO, typical of many up-and-down type fighters, was accused of planning to throw a fight to a second-rate fighter from Denver, Bruce Shanks. He was reported to be receiving $100,000 for his dive in the fight, a beautiful, well-known dynamic fighter in the body and arm. Graziano was right to the chin. Graziano dropped to his haunches under the impact, squatted feebly as Referee Goldstein counted him out in a minute.

Four years and a war later, after Graziano had escaped an Army court martial and Zale served in the Navy, New York Irving Schoolman arranged for the two to meet in Chicago Stadium, July 1, 1947.

With the remainder of the first fight and Zale at a mature, but string 23 years, Tony's leg of fans were confident he'd come through with another win. Graziano was in and fighting 20 years out of his socks. Graziano, 24, was from near Gary, Ind.

105 Under The Lights

WHEN THE SHOW began there didn't seem to be a seat in the place. The paid attendance was 18,547 and $12,918. A record night that led to more fights. Tony's bloody degrees under it was 106 under the ring lights.

Just before the moment before the fight as they listened to instructions from referee Johnny Behr, the manner of each man indicated Zale was the tougher. Tony, his face clean shaven, his skin glowing with power. Graziano, in the picture of good determination. Graziano had a stable head, a long, heated expression and a restless, nervous mood about him.

The fight was on... Graziano lunged at Zale, who calmly knocked the first swing. Zale was up fairly early, his left extended to hook and his right cocked for power thrusts. The crowd came within shouting distance. And, before it could reach the top of its arc, Zale had stepped in with a jab to the chin. Rocky bled, attempted to fire back but he was wide.

Thus a pattern was set, Tony making Rocky pay for each blow.

In the third Zale appeared to be making a concentrated effort to get Rocky's head on the side of the ring. Lamps began to show on Rocky's face and a cut over his eye dripped blood.

"I'll Get Rolin"—Graziano

WHEN GRAZIANO tried to pull away from a Zale left to the chin, Rocky (I'll get Rolin) on the side of the head. Rocky (I'll get Rolin) on the side of the head. Rocky (I'll get Rolin) on the side of the head. Rocky (I'll get Rolin) on the side of the head.

In the corner after the third, manager Irving Cohen, ever-ready, said: "Rocky, Anything wrong with you?" Graziano scowled. "Nah, Nah," he grunted, "I ain't doing rings right, I'll get Rolin, not worry."

Cohen went back to his mind the memory of Rocky's first fight with Zale, in which the veteran had come on even after Rocky had pounded him early... and here Zale didn't even have that to shake off. He'd broken from the barrier and was fighting like a young animal with the best of access to his nostrils.

Thirty seconds after the bell in the fourth, Zale got over a left hook to the body against a Zale left and a possible right. He unlimbered his own right before Zale could evade it and another joined Tony, noticeably, move.

The great-hearted Zale responded as he always did when sent into a combat from a state of battle. He waded in and slugged... and Graziano slugged back. It was suddenly anybody's fight and the temperature quickly rose to a boiling point.

ZALE SEEMED determined to slow it down in the opening seconds of the sixth round, and play for the midsection. Rocky was worried. He followed Zale across the ring until Tony was less than a foot from the ropes.

Instincts carried Graziano. He clawed at the cornered Zale with both hands flying... a right caught Tony on the cheekbone... a right uppercut jerked his head back, another right landed on the chin.

The assault found the gritty but and Zale unable to punch back. Blindly he turned away and into the ropes. Rocky closing in to whip him further.

Rocky's first expression was of disbelief, then of wild joy. "A manning-up game," he said, "I'm a manning-up game." Rocky's first expression was of disbelief, then of wild joy.
