

FIRST IN MARITIMES

Winter Jobs Produced By City Housing Project

"Do It Now" means something special to eight Charlottetown tenants who have combined forces to build one of the first multiple housing units here. The tenants believe the structure is the first individual owner project of its kind in the Maritimes. The completed value is estimated at $100,000.

Located on the old Holy Redeemer tennis court on Upper Queen street each of the individual units will have four bedrooms on the second floor with a downstairs living room and a combination dining room and kitchen. The bath is on the second floor.

November in defiance of the traditional "no building in winter" plans of other years. Already contractor Basil Molyneux has the project more than half completed with 15 to 20 men being steadily employed in what ordinarily is the off season. All contracts and sub-contracts in connection with it were let to Island contractors.

Some of the most modern building innovations are being incorporated in the new structure. These include baseboard heating by individual oil furnaces; Red Seal wiring throughout; fibreglass insulation; and special individual fire protection by means of an 8 inch cement wall from basement to roof between each unit.

Members of the syndicate first named a building committee and afterwards organized a home owners association with $3,000 financial assistance to the 1,200 striking loggers in the camps of the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company.

The loggers, members of Local 2254, International Woodworkers of America, went on strike after a unanimous conciliation board report was rejected by the company.

A press release today from Local 2251 president, John Ferris, said:

"In face of the company's flat refusal to accept the report, local union 2251 has joined the labor movement in support of the very modest demands of the Newfoundland loggers for better working conditions, and for a higher standard of living." The $3,000 aid was voted by the union membership at a meeting here Wednesday.

DO IT NOW CAMPAIGN WINS SOLID SUPPORT

I wish to lend my solid support to the "Do It Now" campaign which is being conducted present by those responsible for all government levels for the welfare of the people. The campaign is being promoted in connection with labor organizations, local businessmen and our service clubs, and has the complete backing of our citizens and householders in doing now repairs and redecorating usually put off until the spring or early summer months. Practically all tradesmen and mechanics in the province can be provided with work to carry them and their families through this serious period of unemployment and offer some income to meet their economic needs. Let us all pull together and let our jobs to work so they may be able to provide for their families through the winter months.
