unfortunate

Cod-liver oil suggests consumption, which is almost unfortunate.

Its best use is before you fear consumption; when you begin to get thin, weak, run down; then is the prudent time to begin to take care, and the best way to take care is to supply the system with needed fat and strength. Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil, with hypophosphites, will bring back plumpness to those who have lost it, and make strength where raw cod-liver oil would be a burden.

A substitute only imitates the original.

GODFREY'S WHITE QUEEN.

BY EDWARD RAYMOND.

CHAPTER XII.

When the Nevilles met at breakfast on the following morning, Audine did not appear. More than an hour passed, and Mrs. Neville became uneasy at her absence. At last she got up, left off pretending to eat her breakfast, and went upstairs to see what made Audine so late.

At the door of her room Mrs. Burns met her, looking exceedingly stiff and severe.

"I think you had better not go in, ma'am," she said, very coldly. "Miss Audine has been very ill all night."

"Ill! Have you sent for the doctor?"

"I have taken that liberty, ma'am. Indeed you had better not go in till he comes."

"Why did you not come for me?" said Mrs. Neville. "It was very wrong of you."

At this moment Audine called out, in a high clear voice, "Aunt Mary" And Mrs. Neville pushed past the nurse, and went in.

The young girl was sitting up in bed, all her long brown hair floating behind her; and she was speaking in a very rapid, confused way. She caught hold of Mrs. Neville's hands.

"Nothing, nothing can save him," she said. "They are going to throw him down the shaft; and all the neighbors blame me, and say it was love for me that killed him. Oh, George, George! I wish he would not watch me so." She clung suddenly to Mrs. Neville. "He watches me, half crouching down; and I know he is there even when I am asleep, and he says such strange things. The White Queen! Godfrey has a bride already. Who said that? And why did he tell me? What is Godfrey's bride to me? There is no perfection like his bride. He is hers, all hers. He is mad, and has given himself to her. What did he mean? and then he went away, poor soul, to the riverside. Sing willow, willow, all the green willow. What is that?"

So suddenly she started, and pointed into vacancy, that an intense terror seized them.

"There! there! there! What is it? Who is it? Is it dead, or does it still move? Will no one tell me who it is? Oh, heaven! is it Godfrey or that other?"

All day the delirium increased. The doctor, when he saw her, sent away his carriage, and refused to leave her side. "She must have had some terrible shock," he said to Mrs. Neville. And the poor woman wept tears of bitter grief and remorse. All day getting worse and worse, Audine's voice, that used to be so soft and sweet, grew so loud and wild that no one could have recognized the sound. Now she would implore Mrs. Neville to help her—to save her from her fate; then call her brother till the house semed to ring with his name. But one ever-present horror seemed to haunt her—Castaletti's face watching her; and sometimes, in her struggles to escape from it, it required all Mrs. Neville's and Burns's united strength to keep her in bed.

So the long days came to an end one after another, and brought no relief. All day Godfrey wandered about in aimless misery. He would sit down and endeavor to read, then spring up and pace the room, or sit with his face hidden, every sense sharpened to hear sounds from the sick-room. Then, for hours together, he would wait on the stairs, till the sound of that beloved voice, never ceasing, never changing in its unnatural tone, became more than he could bear; and he would dash away out of the house—anywhere—to escape. In the evening his mother would come down to him; but she was changed. She seemed as if she could hardly bear to meet his eye; and she would give her hopeless news without any softening words, and go back as quickly as she could. And the days passed on.

Then came a letter from Colonel Fitzjames; he was on his way—would be here in a few days. In anguish, the thought suggested itself to all those watchers, would he be in time? The doctors spoke of a strangely depressed nervous system, aggravated by the violent blow on the head which she had received which had produced this terrible brain-fever.

At last—it was in the dead of night—her voice died suddenly away, and was succeeded by so awful and profound a stillness that they knew not how to bear it.

When morning dawned they said she was just alive, that was all; the heart still beat, the faint breath still dimmed the mirror, but all hope was over—the exhaustion seemed beyond remedies. Godfrey stood outside her door, listening to the softest movement within.

At last they set the door wide open, and he stole in. They were all standing motionless round her, watching the ivory-white of her cheek, the half-shut eyes, the half-closed lips. The doctor bent suddenly down, and put his hand on her heart.

Mrs. Neville gave him one wild look, and he shook his head sorrowfully. Godfrey saw, and could bear no more; he turned and rushed downstairs—down into the room in which he had last seen her, and he leant against the wall against which she had leant when he had held her hands and for one short second pressed her to his heart. His mother followed him, cold as ice, with burning color on her cheeks.

"She is dead, Godfrey," she said, in a voice out of which all the tone had gone—"she is dead, and I have killed her."

Godfrey grasped her arm. "Speak, woman, what do you mean?"

"I decieved her and you. Oh, Godfrey, be merciful!"

"Then it is not true? She did not love me!"

"Godfrey!"

"It is not true! you have broken our hearts, and betrayed us both by a lie."

"Godfrey!"

But he threw her from him, and was gone—gone before she could hold him fast, and had left her alone in her bitter woe.

Meanwhile quick steps had mounted the stairs—steps that had not been there for many a day—and had gone straight to Audine's room.

"They told me I was too late," cried Colonel Fitzjames; his voice sounded strangely loud, and they all drew back, and allowed him to approach and kneel beside her.

"Oh, my God, I am not too late! Audine! my darling, my precious one, look up! Audine!"

Did that voice really bring her back from the grave? Were their prayers keeping her with them? A moment, a few seconds more, and the pure spirit would have returned to God who gave it. But no; from the shore of the dark river the angels brought her back, once more to take up the burden and heat of the day.

A little quiver of the eyelid, not more than the effect of the softest breath of air passing over the petals of a flower—they watched in breathless anxiety—then over her lips came a smile of ineffable sweetness; the angels were bidding her farewell, were winging their way home again and leaving her behind.

The doctor put brandy to her lips—thank God, she swallowed that!—then her head fell back and her eyes closed. In terror Colonel Fitzjames bent down

"No, no," said the old doctor, unconsciously using Bible words, "she is not dead, but sleepeth."

The hush of the house was unbroken; no one moved but to give her what was needful—they hardly dared to breathe.

When Audine again opened her eyes, they rested on her brother with such a look of trust and peace that the tears fell fast from his own, and his whole soul went up to God in passionate thankfulness that he had spared to him the beloved sister, who was to him as dear as his own child would have been.

CHAPTER XIII.

Mrs. Neville confessed all. She strove neither to conceal anything nor to shelter herself from blame, but told all—her reason for so passionate a wish that Audine should marry her son, and the fatal deceit she had practised to bring it about. At first Colonel Fitzjames could not forgive it: his first words were bitter reproaches; but in the thankfulness of watching the daily change and improvement in his Audine, he gradually began to resume his old manner with her, and she felt herself pardoned by him. But she could not forgive herself, and the bitter pain of that time was increased tenfold by Godfrey's disappearance. When he rushed out of the house believing Audine to be dead, he had never returned; and all she knew was that by her wish, Girwood was wandering from place to place seeking him. She dared not think of what his state of mind might be.

Audine's recovery was very slow. Long after the fever left her she was very nervous, and would be constantly entreating her brother to assure her over and over again that Castaletti's death had nothing to do with her. She would wake up in the night in an agony of terror, and nothing would calm her but his presence; and it was many weeks before she grew strong enough to battle with this dread, and overcome it; and they feared it would take years before Mrs. Neville's fatal words would vanish from her mind.

When the early spring set in Audine was allowed to come downstairs. The first sight of Mrs. Neville, shortly after her return to consciousness, had so dangerously excited her, that they were not allowed to meet again; and without the comfort of feeling that she could be of use, the time seemed preternaturally long to the poor woman. A mild, warm spring set in; there were brilliant days, such as often come for a short time in March, when Audine first came down into the drawing-room. Mrs. Neville did not venture to ask her whether she might see her; and Colonel Fitzjames, having forgotten the fact of her seclusion, did not say anything about it; and as the hour drew near at which the little invalid was to appear, she felt her heart beating very fast with anxiety and anticipation. She had rearranged the room completely—it hardly looked the same: a large sofa, flanked by a screen, was drawn up to the window; a little table covered with books and snowdrops close to it; a pretty lace quilt—all to look as bright and cheerful as possible.

She was still standing inspecting all her arrangements, when Burns came in to see if everything was ready. When she saw Mrs. Neville she stopped and would have retreated with a very stiff curtsy; but Mrs. Neville stopped her, involuntarily twisting her hands in her nervousness.

"Burns, do you think I might see Miss Fitzjames? Would it hurt her now?"

"I can't say, ma'am."

"But what do you think? I do so long to see her! but I would not do her harm for the world."

"No ma'am, harm enough has been done already," said the nurse.

"Oh, do tell me! I dare not do it on my own responsibility"—and the tears rose to her eyes.

"I can't take it upon myself to say, ma'am," repeated Burns.

"And has she never asked for me? never mentioned my name?"

"She talked of you incessantly, enough for me to understand perfectly well what she meant, but never to ask for you."

"Burns, why are you so unfriendly to me? you are changed."

Burns was trembling with suppressed feeling. "I can't say, ma'am; things have changed, and them as causes things to change, should not wonder to find them so."

"But in nothing have I changed to you," said Mrs. Neville, haughtily; but Burns's feeling would no longer be controlled.

"Men are not like women, ma'am, and I can see it's all dead and buried like with the Colonel; but I can never forgive you—not if a thousand years passed over my head, and you asked pardon every day of the thousand. To take and deceive my young lady, and she a motherless child! I beg your pardon, ma'am; and if you are offended I cannot help it, for you brought it on yourself"—and without waiting for an answer Burns curtsied and left the room.

Mrs. Neville's first feeling was intense indignation, but to her crushed spirit soon came the relief of tears: she was reaping the sad fruits of ill-doing. She would not attempt to see Audine after that, until one day she recieved a message from the invalid herself, begging her to come to her.

As she was going, Colonel Fitzjames met her and asked her to speak to him in the library first. He looked nervous and hesitating, as if he hardly knew how to begin.

"What have you got to say to me, George?" she said. "If it is to warn me not to agitate Audine, I will tell you beforehand that I will be very careful."

"The fact is, Mrs. Neville," he began, "that one fixed, strong idea has remained in Audine's mind, that she is—in fact, that her engagement to your son stands as it did."

(To be Continued.)

THAT ACHING HEAD.

What Causes It and How Overcome.

How often the remark, "Oh, my head aches," and there are so many varieties of aches and pains the head is subject to all along the line from the dull and heavy and oppressed feeling over the eyes to the persistent, racking and torturing misery of Sick Headache. The cause is in most cases the same, the overflow of poisonous uric acid is not extracted from the blood by the Kidneys, and accumulating in the blood, causes high and irregular pulse, headaches, mental depression and nausea. Chase's K. & L. Pills tone and restore the Kidneys, excrete poisonous matter from the blood, sending it on its way pure and health-giving, curing Headache, and removing all the attending symptoms from its wake. Mrs. G. Bird, Harriston, Ont., while attending the 1894 Fall Exhibition at Toronto, was taken very ill with Sick Headache and dizziness. She was subject to these attacks for years, compelling her to take to her bed. In this case by using Chase's Pills relief was immediately obtained, and the usual days of misery and prostration avoided. Thousands of such cases can be referred to where Chase's Pills have cured Sick Headache and its attendant symptoms. 25 cents a box, of all dealers, or by addressing Edmanson, Bates & Co., 45 Lombard St., Toronto.

Paper Telegraph Poles.

Paper telegraph poles are the latest development of the art of making paper useful. These poles are made of paper pulp, in which borax, tallow, etc., are mixed in small quantities. The pulp is cast in a mold, with a core in the center, forming a hollow rod in the desired length, the cross-pieces being held by key-shaped wooden pieces driven in on either side of the pole. The paper poles are said to be lighter and stronger than those of wood, and to be unaffected by sun, rain, dampness, or any of the other causes which shorten the life of a wooden pole.—Natural Science News.

Positively the Newest Thing.

I see that a very charming young woman, Mrs. Bondurant Henry, gave a walking party recently, the route being Fifth avenue from Fifty ninth street to Maillard's, where light refreshments were served. This is quite a novel entertainment. It was preceded by a luncheon at Mrs. Bondurant Henry's apartments, Central Park South, and the guests were all of one gender—the superfine. Mrs Henry is a young southern matron, and possesses the beauty of the women of her climate—the famous Blue Grass region of Kentucky.—Gothamite.

Only the Rich Can Afford This.

"This is the way to get rich, young man," said the old broker, as he took his luncheon of biscuits and milk.

"You mean that is the way to do after you are rich," answered the younger man. "If I were to eat such stuff as that for lunch everybody would think I was 'broke,' and wouldn't have anything to do with me."

ODDS AND ENDS.

THE ONLY HELP

A Victim of Bright's Disease for Many Years—Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills

NEEPAWA, (Special) May 4.—Mrs. T. H. McKee, formerly of Listowel, came here as a last resort. Had suffered ten years with Bright's disease. Reported to be past help, and dying, her appearance on the street in apparent good health, was a pleasant surprise. The explanation given was that her little boy had insisted that she should use Dodd's Kidney Pills and prophesied that they would cure her. She says: "From the first few doses I began to feel better, and after taking four and a half boxes I say it with heartfelt gratitude I am perfectly cured." Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only medicine in the world that has ever cured a case of Brigths disease at such a stage.

Over $2,000 has been recovered by divers from the steamer Malabar, wrecked off Gille 40 years ago.

The Railroad Kidney.

Rairoad employes, bicyclists, teamsters and men who are subjected to much jolting, are often troubled with pain across the small of the back. This indicates the "Railroad Kidney," an insidious precursor of serious illness. On the slightest symptoms of backache take one Chase's Kidney-Liver Pill—one is a dose—and thus obtain instant relief. For kidney troubles they have no equal. 25c per box.

DON'T MAKE ANY MISTAKE

When you are threatened with consumption or lung troubles and get the wrong kind of emulsion. There is only one perfect pleasant and effective preparation of that life giving substance and it is Miller's Emulsion. There is no bad taste to this preparation. It is compounded on an entirely new principle, by which the vital energy of the liver of the Norwegian cod fish is retained and incorporated with the hypophosphites of lime and soda, making the most potent blood maker known to science. It has saved thousands of young lives and is revolutionizing the old methods of consumption treatment. Miller's Emulsion is the great nerve strengthener and blood maker, and cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Scrofula and all Lung affections. In big bottles, 50c. and $1, at all drug stores.

Ten of the leading frozen meat companies and firms in Victoria have formed a union to regulate and develop the trade.

A Good Deal in a Few Words.

"I paid a Toronto specialist on catarrh a large sum of money, but I got no benefit. I tried them all, but finally, almost in despair, and assuredly without any faith, I tried Chase's Catarrh Cure. It is all that it is recommended, which is saying a good deal in a few words." Joel Rogers, clerk, Division Court, Beeton. Improvement blower in each 25c. box.

Mrs. X.—So the Jones-Browns are going abroad. How do you think the news will be received?

Money No Object.

The amount of money sufferers from catarrh will spend in attempting to cure that foul and disagreeable disease is almost incredible. J. W. Jennings, of Gilford, Ont., says: "I spent between $200 and $300 consulting doctors; I tried all the 'treatments' without benefit. One box of Chase's Catarrh Cure did me more good than all the remedies. A 25c. box cured me." Don't waste money. Chase's Cure, with improved blower, 25c. It cures.

Mr. X.—With universal satisfaction and many expressions of regret.

Fatal Result of Delay

Sickness generally follows in the path of neglect. Don't be reckless, but prudently take a few doses of Scott's Emulsion immediately following exposure to cold. It will save you many painful days and sleepless nights.

"They are bitterly hostile in politics."
"Belong to opposing parties, eh?"
"No they belong to opposing factions of the same party."—Puck.

Bad Blood Between Them.

The ever slaving farmer's wife, her delicate sister in the city, suffer more than they care to tell. The dark rings round the eyes, headaches, dizziness, palpitation or rheumatic twinges, betoken a run-down system. The blood is poor, and is a bar to enjoyment of life. Scott's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, strengthens and vitalizes the system, and speedily restores the bloom of health to the cheeks. It cures when all others fail.

Rubbing It In.

Never use a liniment for rheumatism, says a high medical authority. Don't rub it in—drive it out. Take something that removes the acid poison from the blood—take something that will improve your digestion and build up the body to the perfection of robust health. That "something" is Scott's Sarsaparilla, a remedy that obtains the best results in the shortest time. $1 of all druggists.
