Country club on exotic hotel like the Marrakech, wherever the lady's schedule takes her, she will be the epitome of elegance in this luxurious evening dress by Jo Copeland for Pattullo, fashioned in twin prints of Chemstrand nylon chiffon and satin. America's development of chemical textile fibers has made possible evening clothes that are delicate looking, yet are sturdy as the roughest work clothing and yet will keep their graceful flowing lines through any long, glamorous evening.

New Styles Are A Triumph Of Native Over Art

By Ruhamah S. Frank

Spring! I saw green spears among the sodden grey grasses, and the startling new gold and purple of crocus and hyacinth. I saw shining rose wands with tiny buds among dry branches — And Easter is coming — and the election is over! High time I turned from heavy subjects like Chromosomes — to gayer, lighter aspects of Life — more in keeping with the Season.

NEW STYLES

And what more fitting to consider now than the New Styles — though of course, the New Styles Don't Fit At All! Nor do their names fit. I believe the women of Outer Mongolia — or Outer Space — should be given a truer idea of the dresses known as the "Sack" or "Chemise" — until such time as the fashion maga-

ELLEN'S DIARY

Pleasant Shop Talk Is Enjoyed At Alderlea

"Oh, I couldn't very well part with her" a farmer who stopped by to chat with us this evening commented with a smile. "The minute I open the stable-door in the morning, before I even step inside, that old mare hails me" he smiled. "She doesn't do it for the others — just for me."

"Horses are knowing creatures" James nodded. "They can recognize their master! They know too the other horses in the stable and miss them though you'd never suspect it until you take them a distance from home. I remember occasions when I'd have the team in town in separate rigs-hauling this or that, with someone driving one rig for me. What a fuss they'd make if they lost sight of each other in town. And if one was stabled before the other, he was like a lost child until the other was brought in beside him. And it was the same at the hitching." He shook his head. "It's not the same now going to town — no horses, you may say. Just cars and trucks — that's all."

"But some mighty fine cars" the visitor offered. "The new... is a pretty machine."

"It is now?" James queried. "It's odd" he smiled "but to me the best of them is only a means of travel. I hardly know one make from another. And the worst of it is, I don't care to, either" he grinned boyishly.

Speaking of animals" our guest chuckled. "I was through the country the other day and I called at the... 's. They have a pet lamb — only young yet, but it was lying as content as a kitten between two cats behind the kitchen-stove. It was a cute sight."

"Didn't one of the... 's dogs take over the rearing of a piglet, as well as her pups, the other year?" we asked James.

They said it did well. We've never tried the like of that, but I don't doubt that it would work. When the fox-farming was in its heyday on the Island, many an old cat raised a parcel of pups. We've often done the Robin Hood trick in the piggeries — taken from the rich-littered sow and given to the poor. That takes considerable patience and some luck."

"And you've given neglected lambs to other ewes to raise?" the visitor asked. "Many a time" James nodded. "And there's quite a knack to that too."

"For one thing" we chuckled, "it has to be done, to be successful, at a psychological moment!" "Exactly" James agreed.

"I never had much use for sheep myself — never kept them" the other farmer said "always
