KING'S EVIL

Was the name formerly given to Scrofula because of a superstition that it could be cured by a king's touch. The world is wiser now, and knows that

SCROFULA
can only be cured by a thorough purification of the blood. If this is neglected, the disease perpetuates its taint through generation after generation. Among its earlier symptomatic developments are Eczema, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. If allowed to continue, Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and various other dangerous or fatal maladies, are produced by it.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is the only powerful and always reliable blood-purifying medicine. It is so effectual an alternative that it eradicates from the system Hereditary Scrofula, and the kindred poisons of contagious diseases and mercury. At the same time it enriches and vitalizes the blood, restoring healthful action to the vital organs and rejuvenating the entire system. This great Regenerative Medicine

Is composed of the genuine Honduras Sarsaparilla, with Yellow Dock, Stilllingia, the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and other ingredients of great potency, carefully and scientifically compounded. Its formula is generally known to the medical profession, and the best physicians constantly prescribe AYER'S SARSAPARILLA as an

Absolute Cure

For all diseases caused by the vitiation of the blood. It is concentrated to the highest practicable degree, far beyond any other preparation for which like effects are claimed, and is therefore the cheapest, as well as the best blood purifying medicine, in the world.

ADAM BEDE.

CHAPTER XIX.
ADAM ON A WORKING-DAY.
NOTWITHSTANDING Mr. Craig's prophecy, the dark-blue cloud dispersed itself without having produced the threatening consequences. 'The weather,' as he observed the next morning—'the weather, you see, is a ticklish thing, an' a fool 'ull hit on't sometimes when a wise man misses; that's why the almanacs gets so much credit. It's one o' them chancy things as fools thrive on.'
This unreasonable behavior of the weather, however, could dispense no one else in Hayslope besides Mr. Craig. All hands were to be out in the meadows this morning as soon as the dew had risen; the wives and daughters did double work in every farm-house, that the maids might give their help in tossing the hay; and when Adam was marching along the lanes, with his basket of tools over his shoulder, he caught the sounds of jocosse talk and ringing laughter from behind the hedges.
The jocosse talk of haymakers is best at a distance; like those clumsy bells round the cows' necks, it has rather a course sound when it comes close, and may even grate on your ears painfully; but heard from far off, it mingles very prettily with the other joyous sounds of nature. Men's muscles move better when their souls are making merry music, though their merriment is a poor blundering sort, not at all like the merriment of birds.
And perhaps there is no time in a summer's day more cheering than when the warmth of the sun is beginning to triumph over the freshness of the morning—when there is just a lingering hint of early coolness to keep off languor under the delicious influence of warmth. The reason Adam was walking along the lanes at this time was because his work for the rest of the day lay at a country house about three miles off, which was being put in repair for the son of a neighboring squire; and he had been busy since early morning with the packing of panels, doors, and chimney-pieces in a wagon, which was now gone on before him, while Jonathan Borge himself had ridden to the spot on horseback, to await its arrival and direct the workmen.

This little walk was a rest to Adam, and he was unconsciously under the charm of the moment. It was summer morning in his heart, and he saw Hetty in the sunshine—a sunshine without glare, and with slanting rays that tremble between the delicate shadows of the leaves. He thought, yesterday, when he put out his hand to her as she came out of the church, that there was a touch of melancholy kindness in her face such as he had not seen before, and he took it as a sign that she had some sympathy with his family trouble. Poor fellow! that touch of melancholy came from another source; but how was he to know? We look at the one little woman's face we love, as we look at the face of our mother, and we see all sorts of answers to our own yearnings. It was impossible for Adam not to feel that what had happened in the last week had brought the prospect of marriage nearer to him. Hitherto he had felt keenly the danger that some other man might step in and get possession of Hetty's heart and hand, while he himself was still in a position that made him shrink from asking her to accept him. Even if he had had a strong hope that she was fond of him—and his hope was far from being strong—he had been too heavily burdened with other claims to provide a home for himself and Hetty—a home such as he could expect her to be content with after the comfort and plenty of the Farm. Like all strong nature, Adam had confidence in his ability to achieve something in the future; he felt sure he would some day, if he lived, be able to maintain a family and make a good bread path for himself; but he had a cool head not to estimate to the full the obstacles that were to be overcome. And the time would be so long!
And there was Hetty, like a bright-checked apple hanging over the orchard wall, in sight of everybody, and everybody must long for her? To be sure, if she loved him very much, she would be content to wait for him; but did she love him? His hope had never risen so high that he had dared to ask her. He was clear-sighted enough to be aware that her uncle and aunt would have looked kindly on his suit, and indeed without this encouragement he would never have persisted in going to the Farm, but it was impossible to come to any but fluctuating conclusions about Hetty's feelings. She was like a kitten, and had the same distractingly pretty looks that meant nothing, for everybody that came near her.

But now he could not help saying to himself that the heaviest part of his burden was removed, and that even before the end of another year his circumstances might be brought into a shape that would allow him to think of marrying. It would always be a hard struggle with his mother, he knew; she would be jealous of any wife he might choose, and she had set her mind especially against Hetty—perhaps for no other reason than that she suspected Hetty to be the woman he had chosen. It would never do, he feared, for his mother to live in the same house with him when he was married, and yet how hard she would think it if he asked her to leave him! Yes, there was a great deal of pain to be gone through with his mother, but it was a case in which he must make her feel that his will was strong—it would be better for her in the end. For himself, he would have liked that they should all live together till Seth was married, and they might have built a bit themselves to the old house, and made more room. He did not like 'to part wi' th' lad'; they had hardly ever been separated for more than a day since they were born.
But Adam had no sooner caught his imagination leaping forward in this way—making arrangements for an uncertain future—than he checked himself. 'A pretty building I'm making, without either

A Wolf in Sheep's Clothing.

A great scandal was recently created in England by a bogus parson. At the Leeds Assizes the other day, a clerical counterfeit was sentenced to fourteen years penal servitude. His name was Lindsey, and he had been having a pretty high old time with the Established Church and its vicarities. It seems that by writing testimonials for himself from various benefited clergymen, he succeeded in obtaining curacies in first one and then another diocese. When asked for his certificate of ordination he had forgotten it, and his managers were so grateful and engaging that no one ever thought of doubting his word for a moment. Perhaps he never would have been found out had he not run in debt and stolen surpluses. But these indiscretions provoked inquiry, and at last the wolf in sheep's clothing was laid by the heels. His reading of the Church services and preaching, however, did no one any harm; but in his role of clergyman of the Established Church he solemnized a great many marriages. A great panic seized upon these people when it was found out that he was not a clergyman at all. It was at first generally believed that all the marriages performed by him were invalid, the children resulting from them illegitimate, and that an Act of Parliament would be necessary to legalize them. The Lord Chancellor, however, came to the rescue. He decided that, as the parties married by this wretch believed him to be a clergyman, the marriages were as legal as though he had been one. The charge on which he was convicted was unlawfully solemnizing matrimony according to the rites of the Church of England. The most remarkable feature of the case was the facility with which he duped the clergy.
He claimed aristocratic connections, paid attention to young ladies with fortunes, was deemed an acquisition at dinner parties on account of his conversational powers, and, in fact, so demeaned himself as a real clergyman that it was quite impossible to detect the counterfeit.

bricks or timber. I'm up in the garret ready, and haven't so much as dug the foundation.' Whenever Adam was strongly convinced of any proposition, it took the form of a principle in his mind; it was knowledge to be acted on, as much as the knowledge that damp will cause rust. Perhaps here lay the secret of the hardness he had accused himself of; he had too little fellow-feeling with the weakness that errs in spite of fourteen consequences. Without this fellow-feeling, how are we to get enough patience and charity towards our stumbling, falling companions in the long and changeful journey?
And there is but one way in which a strong determined soul can learn it—by getting his heart strings bound round the weak and erring, so that he must share not only the outward consequences of this error, but their inward suffering. That is a long and hard lesson, and Adam had at present only learned the alphabet of it in his father's sudden death, which, by annihilating in an instant all that had stimulated his indignation, had sent a sudden rush of thought and memory over what had claimed his pity and tenderness.

American Legislative Feuds.

BOTH HOUSES OF CONGRESS JEALOUS OF EACH OTHER.

The Washington Star says: The feeling of antagonism, for it amounts to that, between the House and the Senate seems to increase rather than diminish, and it has now reached a point in which party sentiment and affiliations are sunk in the opposition of one house to the other. The Democrats and Republicans of the House of Representatives join in condemning the Senate for what they term a disposition to usurp the entire legislative functions of Congress. So that as prominent a Representative as Holman said to-day, under the encroachments of the Senate, the constitutional method of legislation was gradually being reversed. Said he: "Half the revenue bills come from the Senate, whereas all of them should originate in the House." Another Representative, sitting by, said: "Yes; the Senate wants to boss everything. The Senators, in order to keep themelves in power, are trying to usurp the roughshod over the House." Among Senators, the opinion seems unanimous that the House is arbitrary and dictatorial, and unless the Senate shall stand firm in the assertion of its rights, "it might as well," as one Senator put it "be content to sit here and pass only such bills as the House chooses to send over." This feeling does not argue well for amicable settlement of the disputed naval appropriation. Close friends of Randall openly declare that it is his purpose to maintain the stand he has taken on the subject, even though it may result in a failure to pass an appropriation for the present needs of the navy. On the House side the prediction is freely made that the Senate will back down, as it did on the Naval bill of last session.
