That Body Of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D.

THE USE OF AUREOMYCIN IN ULCERATIVE COLITIS

I write often about colitis, especially ulcerative colitis, where the colon (large intestine) is greatly inflamed and stools contain blood and pus. For many years, the underlying cause was not suspected although the mild form of colitis, mucous colitis or chronic diarrhoea, was known to be caused by nervousness and emotional disturbances. Ulcerative colitis is now believed to be caused, in the first place, also, by emotional disturbances.

For years the treatment of ulcerative colitis was by removal of a portion of the colon that was most affected, as much as several feet of the colon being removed. Fortunately, when some of the new antibiotics (germ killers) were tried on old or chronic inflammations, many cases were helped, notably inflammation of lining of the heart (endocarditis) and of the brain (meningitis) both of which were usually fatal diseases. It was only natural then that specialists in stomach and intestines should turn to these new drugs—sulfas and penicillin—with which excellent results had been obtained.

In Review of Gastroenterology (stomach and intestines) Drs. S. Strax, J. A. Marks, and L. T. Wright, report their findings in the use of one of the newer antibiotics—aureomycin. Thirty-eight patients with active ulcerative colitis were treated with aureomycin in doses averaging 250 mg. every eight hours. In 31 of these cases, there was a reduction in bowel movements of 50 per cent or more. In 24 or 32 cases, gross blood in the stools disappeared. Thirty-three patients reported significant improvement in the sense of well-being, including greater strength, less pain, less tenesmus (ineffectual straining at stool). Gain in weight (three to 28 pounds) was reported in 14 patients; weight loss occurred in six patients.

Six to 24 months follow-up of 30 cases showed 21 patients to be well, five improved, two unimproved and two with malignant (cancer) tumors. A drug resembling aureomycin, but containing no aureomycin, was given to four patients to see if improvement was imaginary but the diarrhea reappeared in 3 of them and disappeared when aureomycin was again given.

When medical management of ulcerative colitis fails, surgery is necessary, but these physicians believe that aureomycin is the most satisfactory drug now available for the treatment of chronic idiopathic (cause unknown) ulcerative colitis.

Persistent questioning during the days when the gardens were open to the public had driven the old gardener to exasperation, and he boiled over when, as he was planting some saplings, a hearty individual breezed along with: "Ah! What sort of trees are you planting there?" The old gardener straightened his back and almost shouted: "Wooden ones."

DOROTHY DIX'S COLUMN—

Selfish Suitor

He Would Alienate Girl From Family

DEAR MISS DIX: For three years I have been going with a boy I love very much. He claims to love me also, but I think he is being selfish and unsympathetic. If I show love or concern for his mother or sister, he says I think more of them than I do of him. He tries to draw me away from my family; in fact, he disapproves of almost everything I do. He even objects if I want to give up an evening of fun to stay with my mother when she is ill. Do you think it is wise to continue going with him? ANSWER: Any woman can—and in fact, should—be able to fulfill all the functions of normal, human relationships. She should, at the same time, adequately perform the duties of wife, daughter, sister and any other kinships within her scope. This is the balanced—the ideal—life.

For a member of her family or a friend to try to break up any single link in this circle is potentially disastrous, mentally and emotionally.

HELL MAKE POOR HUSBAND

Your fiancé's attempts to draw you away from your family, especially at a time when they need you most, as in illness, are based on selfishness and an arrogant possessiveness. Such qualities are not a good recommendation for a husband. Since you, yourself, question the advisability of continuing the association with your boy friend, the entering wedge of doubt has already crept into your friendship. A

ELLEN'S DIARY

By an Island Farmer's Wife

"It won't be too long now before I'll be off to school" granddaught offered this morning. "I guess" she twinkled with suggestion, "you won't need to find time to read to me then. I'll learn to do my own."

We had come from an outing which had brought "Sunday's wood" to heap the box old shingles from the barn-bullding, under dry for kindling and vegetables for dinner.

It had also provided a trip a distance along the very edge of deep snowdrifts, now heaped and moulded fetchingly in the pad-dock to the rear of the buildings. "This is the Sunrise Trail" she explained. "Down there" she pointed to a winding margin of ice at the base "is the broad ocean. We discovered this ourselves. Jamie named it because, don't you see, we're walking into the place where the sun gets up!"

And now, sorry that we must return to workaday items, she waited a bit desolately on the couch hoping against hope that we might find time to further her entertainment—to read to her or perhaps just to visit together.

It was indeed true. Soon, probably before another year should roll around, this wee maid of ours would be off to make her acquaintance alone with the world beyond the hill. What besides shining new books and a pencil would she carry? What substantial tenets of living had those days of her ain folk given her to stay her well, not only in her school days but all through her years?

Had we given her discipline and courage, faith and honesty—and laughter to place her spirit above every ill? The time folks have with their small ones is all too brief before with a caress and a prayer they give them over to other hands.

Very quietly at Alderlea, the days of this week passed by, with a satisfying "All's Well!" sounding between houses at dawn and dusk. Our living follows the even tenor of January—a quiet but not a leisurely way. Fair days dawned beautifully, in sparkling promise and slipped away in a massing of colors above the woodlands of the west.

In this season of woodwork on farms, home comes the firewood in lengths to increase the heap in the yard—fragrant warrant to the housewives of warmth and heat through the year to come. Witnessed, we recall, partings today, happily without the poignancy of some, yet we suspect not without a mutual regret, when, advancing the cycle of hog raising, weanlings to a number that James is inclined to declare "is entirely too many in the light of present prices" parted company with their mothers and were moved to other quarters.

"Let's not open the door while they're at it" granddaught suggested "because there is apt to be some squealing. Perhaps they know that some day . . ." she nodded soberly but could not bring herself to continue. "Do you think they know?"

And what shall we give to these small ones, while they are still ours? Frances Frost in her poem "Young Mother" sings to an infant: "Child, who tilts upon this small green earth who must with courage ride this planet like a carousel, stay for a breath against my side.

Stay for a moment at my breast, drink laughter, faith and honesty from this deep source from this warm nest you will stand up and face the sky.

Child of my heart, O small new soul, may golden sun and stary snow, clear thought all beauty, make you whole. I give you to your world. Love! Grow!"

Until Monday — Diary — Good-night.

Modern Etiquette

Q. Does the father of a widow or divorcee, who is marrying for the second time, give her away? A. Yes; her father gives her away precisely as he did at the first marriage. And her family again assumes all the expenses of the wedding, unless she prefers to meet them herself.

Q. When a man is the guest of another man in a restaurant or other public eating place, should he share the tip for the waiter? A. No, this is not necessary, the tip being one of the duties of the host.

Q. Do you approve of a girl's using perfume? A. Certainly, I do. But only if the perfume is good, and the scent is kept just to a "suggestion," and not a "shout."

How Can I!!!

By Anne Ashley

Q. How can I remove egg stains from linens? A. Before washing, soak the stains in cold water, as hot water will only set the stains. Common table salt, if rubbed on immediately, will sometimes remove an egg stain.

Q. How can I obtain the most juice from a lemon? A. Roll the lemon well, pressing with the fingers until the lemon is quite soft. This process frees the juice.

Q. How can I remove tobacco stains from brass or nickel ashtrays? A. Apply denatured alcohol with an old toothbrush and then wash in hot vinegar and salt.

For Tomorrow ANY course of action incited by rancor, impetuosity or high tension, in which ideas and desires might be too aggressively or dynamically put over, might have a very disagreeable reaction. Under strain of completing plans and objectives, there are peculiar side issues demanding clarification. Force and violence could aggravate, while suavity, friendliness and gracious concdescension could yield surprising results.

If It Is Your Birthday Those whose birthday it is may run into some difficult and complex situations, which may incline to peculiar reactions. Such might heighten to unusual situations of alliances, and these may call for tactful, profound shrewd or sagacious tactics, and might uncover hidden factors of consequence, possibly flush out trivialities which obscure the main issues.

A child born on this day may have a life of vicissitude, change restlessness and conflict because of psychic undercurrents. It might be carried away by the emotions rather than judgment.

Day After Tomorrow The horoscope holds most auspicious aspects for a day of high promise for all the normal vocations or avocations of the day. These could find gracious and generous fulfillment of the most treasured hopes and wishes. It's time to seek promotions, honors rewards and distinction.

For the Birthday Those whose birthday it is should be assured of the gratifying and generous fulfillment of cherished hopes and wishes. Promotion, preferment, favors from high places are in order, with many side issues of surprise as well as of far-reaching and enduring worth. It is a time for forging ahead to the goal of heart's desires—with assurance and confidence.

A child born on this day seems destined to fulfill the promise of the proverbial "gold spoon," with rich fulfillment of most cherished hopes and wishes.
