Cedar To Be Used In New Flake Board Plant In B.C.

VANCOUVER (CP) — Cedar is showing signs of trimming away its role as a poor relation in British Columbia's pulp industry.

Long considered a misfit by plywood manufacturers, it now will be used by Powell River Company in the manufacture of flake board, a direct competitor of plywood.

M. J. Foley, president of Powell River, said here this week his firm will build an $8,000,000 flake board plant and use cedar waste material from company sawmills as the basic primary raw material. The plant is scheduled to go into operation in 1960.

Dave Harper, Powell River's assistant planning director, says "it isn't the most suitable wood for turning into pulp, but our research men have proved that it is better than other species for manufacturing."

The cedar wastes will be cut into shavings or chips, impregnated with resin and pressed into various size sheets.

SOME ADVANTAGES

Although flake board lacks the strength of plywood, it scores high because it will not warp or twist, sells at a lower price and has a smoother finish.

It can be used in furniture, flooring underlay, cabinet work and a thousand and one other household jobs.

Mr. Foley says the plant will produce about 35,000,000 square feet a year and this will make few inroads into plywood sales now. Plywood sales in 1957 reached 971,000,000 square feet.

The flake board plant is the first of its kind in Western Canada, but similar plants have been in use in Europe and the United States for many years.

It can make use of bits of wood only two inches long, but 12 to 16 inches is the most economical length.

FINE CHIPS

The flake machine has a revolving disc into which are set a series of knives. As the wood is pressed into the machine the chips are shaved into flakes 1-15,000 of an inch thick and about one inch long.

The millions of flakes are dried and sprayed with resin. The pulp is weighed and measured to required size, placed on aluminum trays and passed into a press.

A series of hot irons, at a pressure of 450 pounds a square inch, press the pulp into sheets. The sheets are cooled, sanded and readied for the market.

PM Omitted From Register?

OTTAWA (CP) — For all he knows, Prime 'linister Diefenbaker m:, have been omitted from the Social Register of Canada, the new listing of 40,000 of Canada's social upper crust.

At any rate, he said Wednesday, he has not been notified that his name is included.

The subject of the social register arose as Mr. Diefenbaker chatted with reporters outside the cabinet chamber. One reporter said that all persons listed in the book, to be published today, have been notified.

"Have you been notified," Mr Diefenbaker asked the reporter.

When the reporter said no, the prime minister replied with a grin

"I think you and I are in the same box then. We didn't get notified."
