IN THE SHADOW.

Oh, she will have the deep, dark heart, for all her face is fair— As deep and dark as though beneath the shadow of her hair. For in her hair a spirit dwells that no white spirit's kiss. And hell is in the hopeless heaven of that lost spirit's kiss. She has two men within the palm, the hollow she takes their souls and blows them forth as idle, drifted sand. And one falls back upon her breast that is his quiet home. And one goes out into the night and is as wind blown foam. And is there any home for him whose portion is the night? And is there any peace for him whose doom is endless fight? O wild, sad bird, O wind spent bird, O bird upon the wave. There is no home for thee, wild bird, but in the cold sea grave! —"The Hill of Dreams." by Fina Macleod.

MUSEUM CRANKS.

People Who Want to Dispose of Alleged Valuable Relics. The amateur collector of curiosities generally has an exaggerated idea of the value of his treasures. No sooner does he get hold of something which he considers unique and interesting than he fancies that every museum in the country will jump at the chance of purchasing it from him. With this idea he is continually calling upon museum keepers and trying to persuade them into exhibiting his so called rarities.

The curator of a popular northern museum has been much worried in this way during the last year or so. Only the other week a white haired old man came to him and showed him a dagger which was said to be the weapon used by King John in stabbing the boy Prince Arthur. The dagger was quite a modern affair and showed no signs of age, but the old man stuck to his description strenuously.

"My dear fellow," he said to the curator in patronizing tones, "if you are so blind to your own interests as to refuse this dagger, it is no concern of mine. It has been in our family for centuries, and we are descended in a direct line from Hubert de Bourg, the nobleman who refused to allow Prince Arthur's eyes to be burned out with red-hot irons. I'll give you one more chance, and if you won't have it I'll take it elsewhere."

Needless to say, he had to take it elsewhere. Another crank drove up to the museum gate one afternoon on a dray, to which was strapped a big, cumbersome writing table. The curator hastened out to meet him and was just in time to prevent him bringing the piece of furniture bodily into the hall.

On being asked for an explanation, the visitor said he had decided to present the museum with a priceless treasure in the shape of a writing table used by Sir Francis Bacon. He had been preserving it for a long time, he said, in order that he might write its history, which he had at last completed in a manuscript volume of 320 sheets. The curator, who is, of course, an expert, examined the desk and declared it to be worthless. It had apparently been used in a schoolroom until it had got too rickety for service and was then discarded. At any rate, it couldn't have been more than 70 years old. This report was communicated to the visitor, who thereupon took to raving like a madman and became so violent that he and his treasure had to be moved along by the police.

Royal relics are much in favor with amateur collectors, and, though some of the curiosities submitted to the museum recently have been thought worthy of a place on the tables, the majority have proved to be hopeless rubbish.—London Tit-Bits.

No Use For the Metric System.

We have little to learn or gain by adopting the measures of continental Europe. Three-quarters, or nearly so, of the commerce and traffic of the world is carried on by some form of appliance, whether moved by wind, water or steam, which has been built from English measures by some English speaking people, and the proportion is all the time increasing.

Why adopt another and more inconvenient system which will render all systems of screw threads, gear teeth, foundry patterns, shop drawings, etc., obsolete, as well as shelving the most valuable collection of mechanical literature in the world and requiring all its tables to be translated into a foreign measure, merely to obtain the advantages of a decimal system which we already have to all intents and purposes in a far more convenient form than we should obtain from the introduction of the meter and its derivatives? Besides these two unit measures—the inch and the foot—we also use the cubic yard, in civil engineering, for excavations and earthwork, but for mechanical purposes we could get along very well with no other unit but the inch.—Cassier's Magazine.

She Knew.

Young Mrs. Torkins had read the paragraph through twice. Then she broke into a ripple of laughter. "What are you laughing at?" inquired her husband. "Something funny." "How do you know it's funny?" was the bantering rejoinder. "Humph! I can tell by looking at it. It's about two men who meet on the street. They stand there and say a lot of things and at last one of them says, 'Well, the drinks are on me.' And that shows that it's funny."—Washington Star.

SPECTACLES.

Over twenty-five years I have been in the Spectacle business and during that time have fitted hundreds and hundreds of persons. Some had put off getting glasses so long that they could not see a large 4 inch letter A without going within 2 or 3 feet of it, and might have gone blind if they had put off getting glasses much longer. Others have been fitted or rather misfitted, with wrong glasses by travellers, and charged a great deal more than they ought to have been. This year our traveller, Mr. C. H. White, intends calling on parties at their homes in the country, to test eyes and show samples of our goods. Should he call on you I bespeak for him your favorable consideration, and any order you may give him will be filled as soon as possible and guaranteed by me. Glasses can also be exchanged at the store, CAMERON BLOCK, City, if after a trial they do not prove as satisfactory as you wish.

In former times deformed people were frequently thrown into prison to be kept out of sight.
