MAJOR HOOPLE

Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

All living things without doubt are afraid of death. Nevertheless some creatures such as small fish huddle together as though they were created for the larger fishes, and wished to give the least possible trouble to their captors. Whales will swim in circles around a school of herring until they flukes. Then one whale will swim through the massed herrings with open mouth and scoop in a small boat load at a single mouthful. Schools of sardines and smelts are captured and swallowed wholesale by a number of cavally-fish. The small fry don't have a ghost of a chance as the cavally circled round, reeding from the edge of the mass.

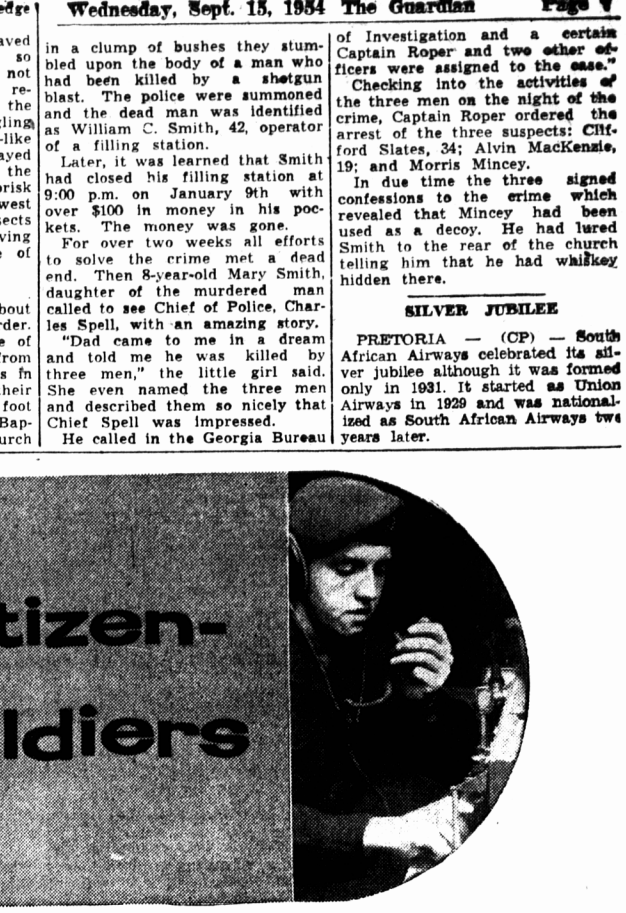

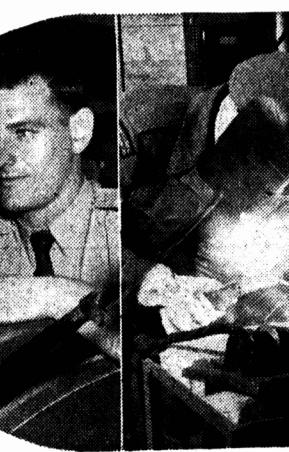

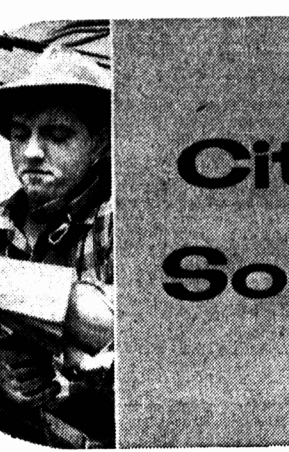

Two years ago a wind saved Israel from a locust swarm so great that if they had landed not a green sprout would have remained above ground. When the people of this young struggling nation saw the black cloud-like swarm over Jordan they prayed for divine intercession against the locust hordes. Soon after a brisk wind sprang out from the west and pushed the invading insects back the way they came, leaving Israel almost completely free of them.

And now let me tell you about a dream that solved a murder. On January 10, 1942, a couple of colored men were returning from a hunting trip to their homes in Wadley, Georgia. To shorten their journey they cut through a foot path that led past a little Baptist church. Just behind the church of Investigation and a certain Captain Roper and two other officers were assigned to the case.

Checking into the activities of the three men on the night of the crime, Captain Roper ordered the arrest of the three suspects: Clifford Slates, 34; Alvin Mackenzie, 19; and Morris Mincey. In due time the three signed confessions to the crime which revealed that Mincey had been used as a decoy. He had lured Smith to the rear of the church telling him that he had whisky hidden there.
