A Simply Made Ragout Nothing To Stew About

"JUST what is a ragout? Sounds hard to fix," a young bride said to the Chef. "A ragout is a stew," he explained. Not merely a plain meat stew, but a stew that is carefully prepared to retain its fine flavors and nutrients, seasoned with care and imagination, and presented bubbling merrily in a big casserole or electrified Dutch oven.

Ladle II Out. To serve with chic, ladle the stew over warmed, sliced French bread placed in pottery soup plates. A ragout usually contains all the ingredients needed to make a complete entree course. Provide a knife, fork and soup spoon for the eating. A tossed green salad is a suitable accompaniment.

"Would a ragout be all right for a late evening supper after skiing or skating?" asked the girl. "Ah, oui — any kind! Par example, Beef Bourguignonne; or Spanish beef or chicken ragout; or a tasty Ragout of Lamb Central European, which is a winter favorite abroad. And you know ragouts and stews of all kinds may be pressure-cooked in 1/4 the usual top-of-range time."

Timely Protection Tips For Winter Footwear

Good boot care is the first step in putting your best foot forward on a snowy or slushy days, says the Shoe Information Bureau of Canada.

While many of this season's fashionable winter boots were given a water-proofing treatment by the tanners who made the leather, they will need further periodic application of a silicone spray which you can obtain from any retailer. There need be no hesitation about using this silicone spray on suede as well as on smooth leathers.

Use of the waterproofing silicone sprays won't prevent the salt rings from forming — that bug-a-beat of town and city dwellers — but it will make it much easier to erase. As soon as you come in from out-doors, wipe your boots clean, rub with a fresh cloth and finish with a lamb's wool brush, follow with a good shoe polish for a high gloss on smooth leathers. Incidentally, the water-proof sprays are effective on fabric and fur as well as on leather. Saddle soap is good for restyle finishes. Many of the new fashionable boots — this year boasted reptile trims.

If boots become soaked after cleaning, stuff them with tissue paper and set aside to dry at room temperature, never on a radiator or near direct heat. When dry, polish as directed.

A timely tip for keeping the interiors of boots clean, as well as for fast drying, is to reverse the vacuum hose on your vacuum cleaner so that it blows. Insert it in the boot and it will dry within minutes.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Stream Ripples Indicate Roving Muskrat's Course

It was an all white morning we came to this dawn. Roof, post, twig and wire were adorned with night-fallen snow. All white, from the window it was, in the early light, except where the stream wound, as free as in summer, between its prettily moulded banks.

"Pop" we caught a glimpse of the dark of a roving muskrat, seeking haven in the flow, when we came presently with some malling to the box at lane's end. Ripples, noticeable at first, and then fading, marked his course until at length he was lost to us around a bend.

Continuing mild the day was, pleasant as has been the recent spell of weather, though with light-feathery snowfall, and without sign of sun through the lowered gray clouds.

"It won't be long now, Ellen!" James remarked at breakfast, "before we notice that the days are lengthening — stretching out a bit in the evenings." First chores had been done. Animals in sty and stall had been fed. Our meal could be unburied. There was time to linger a while over it — take another cup of tea, and chat.

"In the growing of the January moon, we'll notice it," we said. And pictured the beautiful winter nights ahead. The far "sharp" stars. The smokes from our hearthfires reaching up into the magic silver in pearly columns to be reflected in blue shadows on the white breast of the snow. And the balsams, the firs and spruces up and down our valley, standing in fence-row and woodland, feebly dark there against the bright of the winter night. And the crisp footsteps, and frosted breaths. And the night-echoes ringing clear in the frostiness.
