What Is Dr. Chase's Nerve Food?

In appearance Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is an oval, chocolate coated pill. In the condensed form it contains all of nature's most strengthening and invigorating tonic and restoratives and for this reason it is unapproached as a blood builder and nerve restorative. It cures all diseases caused by thin blood and exhausted nerves and makes pale, weak nervous men, women and children strong and healthy—50 cents a box.

A Good Stomach.

Is essential to health and happiness, but don't blame the stomach for biliousness. It is deranged, and causes poisonous bile to remain in the blood causing indigestion, headache and irregular action of the bowels. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills regulate the liver, kidneys and bowels and by their direct action on these organs effect prompt and lasting cures of biliousness, dizziness, headache and all kidney ailments. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers.

THE DUTIES OF EMPIRE.

The London Daily Chronicle has been collecting the opinions of colonial friends of Imperial Federation touching imperial defence. This is a subject which has been occupying the attention of every statesman of Great Britain and her colonies since last fall and it is hardly likely that the South African problem will be settled without some solution of the imperial question of mutual against internal and external foes being reached. In the last report of the Imperial Federation (Defence) Committee, it is noted with satisfaction that, with one exception, all the self-governing colonies of the empire are now in one or other form contributing to the maintenance of the royal navy. Why, it may be asked, is there any exception? It is easy to imagine circumstances in which every one of those colonies or leagues of colonies would be depending on the navy of Great Britain for its independent existence. Just now we see the powers of Europe, through lamentable complications in China, clinging desperately together in face of a common, half-barbarous enemy. But whatever be the immediate outcome of the trouble, it is almost certain to be followed after a possible brief interval by a conflict between the powers especially concerned in the commerce of the Far East and in the keeping of China open to the world. The conflict of interest may be susceptible of peaceful solution. But the rival pretensions of some of the nations that are not making a common stand against Chinese fanaticism may resist any compromise or yield to it only to take a more acute form before long. The possibility of war must ever, in fact, be borne in mind however forecast and menace may seem for a time to be deceptive. War never breaks out just as the would-be prophets arrange. Seasons of great pressure and danger apparently unavoidable may be tided over only to make way for the lightning out of a clear sky, the eruption that no one was dreaming of, the war that comes without any warning rumors. Who foretold the Boer-British struggle? Who foresaw the obstacles that stood between England and success? Who can tell how soon every pacific territory that flies the British flag may be forced to defend itself against Russia? For it is at least possible that the sequel of the present unhappy complications may be a war between that empire and Great Britain.

Such a war is, however, not one or many possibilities for which the Empire, through all its members, must ever be prepared. If the movement for the maintenance of the Empire's integrity has any special significance, it is in having brought home this vital fact that the whole is responsible for every part and every part for the whole. The principle is not new, but its practical recognition has been so long neglected that we take credit for the first steps in the discharge of a duty that ought to be a second nature to us. It may be thought strange that the cluster of colonies especially excepted from contribution to the navy should have a seaboard on the three of the world's great oceans; that it has waterways that traverse the continent into the heart of which great ships can penetrate. Alone, it must have a navy proportionate to its merchant marine. But it has no ambition to cast itself adrift from its old moorings. This year, in a signal manner and with the solemnity of a blood offering of priceless worth, it has renewed the covenant with the Motherland, South Africa marks the beginning of a new era, in which every part of the Empire that has a life and will of its own assumes obligations, the observance of which must make or mar our future.

As to the details of those obligations, so far as Canada is concerned, it is premature to speak with confidence. We are in the stage of suggestion, of counsel, of discussion. But no exact decision can be reached either as military re-organization or the formation of an imperial navy or the definition of a method for the formulation of the imperial diplomacy until a conference is held at which the Empire will be fully represented. When this is understood, we may take the opinions of individuals, or of societies on questions of imperial reconstruction as contributions more or less valuable according to their practicability and the experience of the writers. As Sir John Bourinot says, it is doubtful if the people of Canada will allow anybody but their own Parliament to vote funds for the army and navy of the empire. Mr. Macfarlane, of Ottawa who has also long been a student of these questions, puts the matter concisely when he says: "There shall be only one fleet." Principal Grant points out that Canada has a small navy in the shape of a preventive service, while in her 70,000 seamen she has a fine nucleus for a naval force to act with the royal navy. Dr. Carman thinks it better that Canada should have small military and naval forces of her own than that she should contribute a bulk sum to the imperial exchequer.
