The special Centennial competition for community participation is being pushed this year by the Rural Beautification Society. It has been learned with special emphasis on road-side improvement that is due before July 1, so that it will serve as an added tourist attraction in this the Island's big year, a society spokesman emphasized last night.

The competition is open to all organizations in any non-incorporated community in the province. A number of organizations may join forces in the competition attempt but in the case of money won, they will be responsible for dividing it among themselves.

The first prize is a generous $500 and it must all the way down to $100 cash for fifth placing. But an additional $500 is available to the community that does most, in the opinion of the judges, to brighten up and beautify the roadside areas by July 1.

The general community competition includes beautification of community halls, schools, public buildings, private residences, community-owned parks, playgrounds or picnic areas, private and public lanes and roadsides.

The society decided this week to extend the closing date for entries to Saturday, May 2, which is one week longer than had been decided at first.

Spokesmen for the society emphasize the need for contestants who were in the competition previously and intend competing again, getting in their entries as soon as possible.

Some 65 entries have been received to date, which "is about normal," but the people responsible for the competition would like to see that number increased considerably this year.
