Quebec Province Film Described As Shocking

By JOHN YORSTON

MONTREAL (CP) —"We don't have much confidence in politicians. They are more crooked than we are. We don't have the means of being crooked."

The speaker is a 22-year-old shipyard worker from the Quebec City district. He has worked for six years, but has been unemployed during two of them. He didn't think this was too bad.

He was one of dozens of young people interviewed during a film turned out for the Quebec Liberal Federation and shown during the annual meeting here.

Premier Lesage called it "a brutal film."

"You are going to be shocked by it," he said introducing the film produced during a two-week spin around the province in August.

But he said the party and the Liberal government must know what young people are thinking.

ADD MILLION VOTERS

The film pointed out that roughly 1,000,000 voters have been added to the electoral lists since the voting age was lowered to 18 from 21 in the province.

The young people interviwed, between the ages of 18 and 23, came from "less fortunate" sections of society. They were interviwed on streets, farms, in taverns and bars, and on church doorsteps.

Several said they are not understood by the over-40 generation. "We are a world apart," said one.

Some expressed guarded support for the terrorist movement.

"It made people wake up," said another. "A few months in jail, that's not bad. But they seem to be going to sleep again."

Most said they knew little about politics and didn't trust politicians.

Some of the young people were asked what they would do if they became premier tomorrow. Many said they would try to get rid of unemployment. Another would step up education and another would create a government department to coordinate and establish leisure time activities.

British Wonder If Dignity Will Prevail In Campaign

By ALAN WALKER

LONDON (CP)—Britain's political leaders spent the weekend debating whether the forthcoming election will sparkle with the traditional ballyhoo of an American presidential race or whether the more traditional British dignity will prevail.

Labor Leader Harold Wilson, a student of the late president Kennedy's successful 1960 campaign, suggested Prime Minister Douglas-Home meet him in a face-to-face television debate, similar to the celebrated Kennedy-Nixon battles.

Home made clear he wanted no such meeting. He accused the Labor party of trying to turn Britain's Oct. 25 election into a circus and added rather huffily in an interview Sturday:

"This is not a presidential election. It is the British general election."

It was left to William Deedes, minister without portfolio, to spell out more specifically the Conservative objections to Wilson's scheme.

1,700 CANDIDATES

"Manifestly, Mr. Wilson has been studying Mr. Theodore White's impressive documentary The Making of The President. But (Britain) is a parliamentary democracy, with something like 1,700 candidates in the field," Deedes told a meeting at Ashford, Kent.

"We should not make the mistake of allowing modern communications to confuse this important distinction.

"Television is bound to exert an important influence in this campaign. Many will share my hope it will not succeed in establishing a monopoly over the public political mind."

The political parties will have equal time on television, but they plan to use that time differently. Conservatives plan a series of programs showing Douglas-Home or a key cabinet minister responding quietly and soberly to the latest Labor attack as it developes.

Meanwhile, Labor has hired an avant-garde film company to provide a mixture of informal filmed matter with live talks by Wilson or Deputy Leader George Brown.

BOTH UNCOMFORTABLE

Television really makes both leaders uncomfortable, press reports say.

Douglas - Home and Wilson both plan extensive speaking tours. Douglas-Home will make major speeches in Nottingham, Manchester, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Bradford and Birmingham —each in a constituency now held by a Conservative with a slim majority.

Wilson plans a 3,000 - mile speaking tour beginning in Wales, then covering much of Scotland and England and ending with a giant political meeting on the eve of the election in Liverpool.

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
Pass	1 ♣	3 ♠	4 NT
Pass	5 ♦

Opening lead—ace of spades.

Terence Reece, generally regarded as one of the best players in the world, tells this story about a hand he played for Great Britain last year in a match against Switzerland.

It seems that at the first table, where a Swiss pair held the North-South cards, the bidding went as shown. North apparently decided that his hand would produce a slam in diamonds if his partners opening bid included two aces, and he therefore launched straight into Blackwood when West overcalled the club bid with three spades.

South responded five diamonds, showing one ace, and there he played the hand— with a singleton trump— when North passed, realizing that the opponents had two aces.

West led the ace of spades on which East played a high heart. It made no difference now whether West played a spade or shifted to a heart; in either case, South was bound to make five diamonds.

At the second table, where Reese was South, the bidding went this way:

East	South	West	North
Pass	1 ♣	3 ♠	5 ♦
Pass

Reese was now tempted to bid a slam with his hand, but, realizing that some of his values would probably prove worthless, he passed. As he put down the dummy, he heard a sharp exclamation of dismay by a lady spectator sitting behind him who had obviously counted up his 21 high- card points.

"Do you think I should have raised my partner to six?" he said to the lady somewhat patronizingly.

"I certainly do," she replied firmly.

It turned out that the lady was absolutely right. With East on lead, the slam could not be defeated. East opened the ace of hearts and continued with a heart, but the defense did not really matter — since North could always make twelve tricks regardless of how East chose to defend.

Smallwood Not Interested In Power Sale To Quebec

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — Premier Smallwood said here the Newfoundland government is "not in the last" interested in re-opening negotiations with the Quebec government or with Hydro - Quebec for power from the proposed Hamilton Falls development in Labrador.

"The Newfoundland government," he said, "has other plans for Hamilton Falls power."

At the same time Mr. Smallwood denied a report the Newfoundland government did not start a study of a possible alternate route for Hamilton Falls power until negotiations with Quebec broke down.

Mr. Smallwood said his government had engaged in a firm of British engineers five months before negotiations broke off with the Quebec government. His government, he added, had actually received a preliminary report on the alternate route project two months before the talks ended.

The Newfoundland government was now awaiting a final feasibility report on the alternate route system.

The proposed route would take power produced at Hamilton Falls east across Labrador to the Strait of Belle Isle, by underwater cable across the strait, down the west coast of Newfoundland and then be carried by overhead transmission lines through Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to New England.

Jacques Georges-Picot, president and managing director of La Societe Financiere du Canal Suez and a director of British Newfoundland Corporation, was quoted in an interview in Montreal Friday as saying "there is still means of coming to an understanding" on the proposed Hamilton Falls power development.

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
