

Reproductions Of Ships Sparks N.S. Controversy

By DAL WARRINGTON
HALIFAX (CP) — Reproductions of two famous sailing ships have stirred up as much controversy in this seaside province as the speed of rival tea clippers did a century ago.

Nova Scotians always were ready to argue about ships and sailing men. Now one group of citizens wants to bring back a facsimile of the 1787 mutiny-ship Bounty, Nova Scotia-built two years ago for a Hollywood movie.

Another group wants to build a replica of the racing schooner Bluenose, queen of the fishing fleet 40 years ago. The big problem facing both groups is where to get the money.

The bring-back-the-Bounty campaign is headed by Victor Oland, Halifax brewer and president of the local board of trade. Capt. Angus Walters, 79, skipper of the original racing fishing vessel, leads the build-the-Bluenose drive.

NO SIGNIFICANCE!
 Bluenose supporters say the Bounty replica has no historical significance for Nova Scotia. Bounty promoters say she would be worth her weight in gold as a tourist attraction.

Letters and telegrams are flowing in a steady stream to Prime Minister Diefenbaker, Revenue Minister Nowlan, Premier Stanfield of Nova Scotia, MPs, members of the legislature, and newspaper editors.

One anti-Bounty critic described the movie replica as "skin to the feverish dream of 'the Ancient Mariner' — a painted ship upon a painted ocean, built to be photographed but not minutely examined."

He was referring to the modern engines, electric galley and spring-filled mattresses with which the new Bounty is equipped.

On the other hand Mayor Guy Hiltz of Louisbourg, N.S., said, "She could be one of our biggest drawing cards."

Mr. Oland says the aim of his campaign is "to improve economic conditions by giving a stimulant to the tourist industry."

ARGUE COST
 The argument extends to the probable cost of the two projects. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, the film producers, offer to give the Bounty to the Canadian government free, but on condition that the ship make an extended cruise this year to publicize the movie.

Estimates of what this trip would cost range from $75,000 to $400,000. Mr. Nowlan says Ottawa is considering the idea.

Premier Stanfield says the province might contribute to the Bounty bill but only if Nova Scotians show they really want the ship. The Oland-headed group has launched a drive by Nova Scotia boards of trade to raise $25,000.

While Bounty supporters were making this effort, Capt. Walters convened another committee of Halifax and Lunenburg businessmen. They embarked on a Canada-wide campaign to raise $250,000 by public subscription to build a new Bluenose. The original Bluenose cost $35,000.

Smith and Rhuland shipyards at Lunenburg built the Bluenose in 1921 and the Bounty replica in 1960.

Quebec Woman Loses Fight With CNR For Hiding View

OTTAWA (CP) — Mrs. Olive Trudeau of St. Lambert, Que., has for the moment lost a court fight to collect $17,615 from the CNR for blocking her view of the sunset on the St. Lawrence River.

Mrs. Trudeau is the owner of a home at 145 Riverside Drive property, entirely cutting off her view.

In August, 1959, Mrs. Trudeau launched an action in the Quebec Superior Court for damages of $17,615. She claimed that the value of her property was depreciated because the elevated railway cut off her "fine view of the river, of the city, of Mount Royal and of the sunset."

The CNR argued that Mrs. Trudeau's action could not be taken in Quebec Superior Court.

Theft Of Bonds Reported In P.Q.

MONTREAL (CP) — Quebec Provincial Police Wednesday disclosed the theft of $442,500 worth of bearer bonds from a Joliette, Que., home during the night of Jan. 20-21.

First public report of the theft from the home of Mrs. J. Megard LaFortune came as police warned brokerage houses, banks and trust companies to be on the look-out for the negotiables.

The bonds on hospitals, municipalities, parishes and various other organizations were taken from a bed in a little-used bedroom.

Gaelic Charms Are Extolled Before BBG

QUEBEC (CP) — The charms of Gaelic—and some of its mysteries—were extolled before the Board of Broadcast Governors.

Morris Nathanson, vice-president of radio station CIBC Sydney, N.S., said that near the first of each month the station broadcasts some morning devotional programs in Gaelic.

Mindful of a recent BBG statement which said stations must have translations of "foreign" language broadcasts, Mr. Nathanson said he has never asked for translations.

"I'm not sure we would get them," he added with a smile.

Carlyle Allison, vice-chairman of the board, said that as far as he knows, the Winnipeg Gaelic department still uses Gaelic in radio messages to its cruisers. The crooks can't understand it.

Dr. Andrew Stewart, Edinburgh-born chairman of the board, said that if everyone was Gaelic there would be no crooks.

Both CIBC and the publicly-owned CBC's Sydney radio station, CFI, applied for power increases to 10,000 watts from 5,000. This will give each station about 9,000 to 10,000 more potential listeners, the board was told.

Among those seeking power increases at the board hearing Tuesday was a radio station CKBM Montmagny, Que.
